We had heavy snow last week but business has been steady. Prices keep high, with stock scarce. The retail demand has been fair, considering the bad weather conditions. The Baltimore Florists' Exchange has many advance orders and little is left for the one who has no order in. Everything is sold.

Roses are steadier and carnations more regular, some bringing up to $8 per hundred, according to quality. Freesia is selling at $1 per hundred. Tulips are bringing good prices. Callas are still scarce. Paper Whites and Romans are doing better, but are not so plentiful. Sweet peas are short in supply. Greens of all kinds seem to be enough to meet demand.

Baltimore's great fire, February 7, 1904, has made history in every business. The florists are all prosperous, but not one florist was caught in the conflagration. C. E. Smith & Co. and E. A. Seidewitz were the only ones in the immediate neighborhood, and they were fortunate in escaping. Since then Mr. Seidewitz has opened an up-to-date store on North Charles street, in the same block with Halliday, Feast and J. Cook. C. E. Smith & Co. have made extensive alterations in their place. The improvements since the great fire are too numerous for me to mention. Nearly every florist has done his share.

Club Meeting.

The regular meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club was held February 11, President Lehr in the chair. There was a good attendance. The ladies' night, which was to have occurred on this date, will take place February 25. C. H. Wagner was elected a member. The likeness of the founder of the club, the late Robert Halliday, now hangs over the president's chair. Otto Fielder was proposed for membership.

Professor Symons, of the Maryland Agricultural College, gave an interesting talk on the coming Jamestown exhibition and encouraged the members to exhibit their products. At the first meeting in March Professor Symons will again be with the club and urge its members to coöperate with him. An exhibition of plants and cut flowers will be shown.

Various Notes.

While trimming a tree a short time ago, L. P. Eyer was thrown to the ground. He sustained a sprained ankle, but is able to be about again.

H. Tilton, 519 N. Chester street, reports business good, with a run on funeral work.

M. J. Hannigan, florist for General James A. Gary, Catonsville, has the grip, but will be able to attend to his greenhouse duties in a few days.

J. Owens, of J. G. Owens & Co., Catonsville, underwent an operation at University hospital for tumor in the back. It is expected he will be about in a few days.

Mrs. Annie Bangert, the gardener's wife who put poison in the spring of E. Stanley Gary on his country place, was sentenced to two years in the house of correction.

August Eberhart, W. Baltimore street, is sending some fine tulips to the market.

It is expected a large number of the Gardeners' Club members will attend the American Rose Society meeting in Washington.

J. Bolgiano & Sons will exhibit at the Jamestown exposition. Herbert Cameron will be in charge. J. L. T.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

The bright sunshine has had its effect on the supply of cut flowers, which is better at the close of the season than at any time since New Year's. The demand is excellent, but with the marked increase in supply there is a slight tendency toward lower prices, especially on carnations. The bulbous flowers are plentiful and extremely fine. An important addition to the list is the double orange tulip, Coronne d'Or, which can now be had in quantity. Roses are ever so much better than a fortnight ago; some really choice stock is coming in, noticeably in the teas. Forget-me-not has made its appearance in sufficient quantity to lead to the belief that it will be an important factor in Thursday's business. Orchids are less plentiful. Valley is good and in excellent demand. A novelty is Edward A. Stroud's schizanthus, a pretty white flower with good stems, shown by the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co. This firm also has exceptionally fine sweet peas, which are now selling well. Violets are in demand. While Lent has begun, St. Valentine's coming the day after Ash Wednesday gives an impetus to business, which makes it improbable that prices will change materially at present.

Broken by Snow.

A. Farenwald, of Hillside, lost two large houses of Richmond last week which were crushed in by the weight of the snow. The work of rebuilding was at once commenced.

Henry Whelen, of Newton, had two houses seriously damaged last week. They fell in during the snow storm.

A. Harvey & Sons, of Brandywine Summit, had the end of one carnation house badly damaged by the snow storm last week.

The Hugh Graham Co., Logan, Pa., had one house, filled with azaleas, badly broken in last week's storm.

Evolution.

The immense increase in the quantity of Easter lilies forced during midwinter is one of the most striking features of the advance of knowledge and skill among our growers. A few years ago these lilies nearly all came from out of town. The price was then 20 cents to 25 cents a flower. Now they are produced here in increasing quantities, one firm, T. N. Yates & Co., supplying 1,000 flowers in pots for a single decoration. In speaking about lilies, Walter N. Yates, of this firm, said he believed Lilium Harrisii was the only type that could be grown for early forcing and that the price obtained must be sufficient to cover the loss on diseased bulbs that are still an important item of expense.

The Second Assembly.

The second assembly, always held on the Friday before Lent, marks the close of the ball season among the F. F. P. Through the courtesy of John P. Habermehl I am able to give the Review readers ideas regarding the decorations.

The ballroom of the Bellevue-Stratford is so beautiful that it requires little aid from the decorator in the way of covering corners or changing proportions. All efforts are turned to heightening the effect as it is. The stage is banked, the receiving room embellished, an occasional specimen placed, and that is all. The strong points in the decoration, which was in perfect taste, were the quality of the plants used, the suitability or proper selection of sizes and the simplicity of color, green predominating, flowers chiefly pink and white. The novel features of the decorations were the dwarf Japanese apple and cherry trees in bloom. A few wistarias were also seen. The color idea was carried out on the supper tables, fancy Bridesmaid roses and white lilac predominating. A hundred or more little tables, each containing a single tall vase filled with one flower of fine quality, made a garden effect of great beauty. I understood the decoration was arranged by Edward Habermehl, whose work has been greatly admired this winter.

A Letter From Mars.

A member of the American Rose Society writes me as follows: "Anything that you may do to advance the interest in the forthcoming meeting in Washington will be appreciated by all the members. The meeting promises to be the best that has ever been held, a number of prizes stimulating the interest of the growers, and we want all our good friends to help make the exhibition the most noteworthy of recent years." ranks of the rosarians. It is a letter to make a man do his best, the compliment in writing to me being especially gratifying. Possibly the choice is due to Mars' belief that I am a successful beggar. Well, I have begged successfully once or twice, so spurred by the confidence of Mars I will do my best.

I appeal to the rose growers of Philadelphia to exhibit their flowers or plants at Washington March 13.

I appeal to John Burton, to Alfred Burton and to George Burton to uphold the honor of a name famous in floriculture.

I appeal to Joseph Heacock, of Wyncote, to add another spray of laurel to the wreaths gathered all the way from the eastern seaboard to Kansas City.

I appeal to J. Henry Bartram to break a lance for the honor of the Quaker city.

I appeal to Frank P. Myers and to Martin Samtman to put one more victory to the credit of the "amateur" rose growers.

I appeal to the mighty Farenwald to turn his conquering arms from north to south.

I appeal to Alexander B. Scott to at least let us know and love his Irish friends and Ramblers.

I appeal to Casper Pennock and George L. Pennock to flesh their maiden swords in this great tourney.

I appeal to John C. Andre to let the Capital city see what we once saw.

I appeal to Edward Towill, of Roslyn, not to let prosperity relax his sinews.

I appeal to I. Stephenson, of Oak Lane, to enter the coming tourney.

I appeal to George Anderson, to James Verner, to William Munro, to David Anderson, to W. E. Fowler, to C. F. Knorr, to C. W. Jennings, to John Savage, to Joseph Blois, to A. J. Pennock, to G. E. Campbell, to G. F. Christie and to George Waterfield to let the world know their skill.

I appeal to Stephen Mortenson, of Southampton, to show what the combination twixt the soil and Samuelson can really do.

I appeal to D. Fuerstenberg and to Henry C. Geiger to introduce the President to their fair Queen and many more.

I appeal to William A. Leonard, of Lansdowne, to show us cup winning grafts, and sports and crosses, too.

I appeal to Eugene Weiss to prevail on Samuel Lilly to catch the Congressional express with just one box of specials.

I appeal to William Kleinheinz, of Lynwood hall, to show those grand hybrid roses.

I appeal to Robert Craig and to Robert A. Craig to favor Washington with Annie Muller and Lady Gay.

I appeal to William K. Harris and to Mark B. Mills to give the senators a glimpse of their Baby Ramblers.

I appeal to Jacob Becker to strive with might and main to outdo famed Wood's Hole.

I appeal to every Philadelphia rose grower not here named to advance the interests of our profession by going to Washington and exhibiting there.

Various Notes.

The Leo Niessen Co. opened business in its commodious new quarters at 1209 Arch street last Monday morning. The telephones were all installed in time and working nicely. They now have four Keystones. Despite the difficulties of getting into a new building, business was evidently very brisk.

The fire noted last week at the store of Dumont & Co. proved to be slight. The deal with Berger Bros. has been consummated. Berger Bros. will, therefore, open at 1305 Filbert street on March 1. They are now carrying on the business of both concerns at 1237 Filbert street.

Germantown Horticultural Society last Monday evening. It was well attended and very interesting.

The kindly spirit of helpfulness shown by our florists to those who suffered from the weight of the snow is the pleasantest part of a sad mishap.

Ralph C. Faust, treasurer of the S. S. Pennock-Meehan Co., is happily recovering from typhoid fever.

M. Rice & Co. received orders on Monday from pretty nearly the four corners of this continent.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. are working night and day getting out their large stock of Easter novelties and staples.

Edward Towill, of Roslyn, purchased several acres of ground adjoining his present property recently. It is understood that Mr. Towill expects to build this season.

Victor Groshens has purchased twenty acres of ground adjoining Edw. Towill, at Roslyn. He will erect two large houses this season, probably of truss construction.

The Century Flower Shop has just arranged a pretty Japanese garden at the back of the greenhouse. It is an exquisite little piece of work, with many curious stones and other objects of special interest to the initiated. An ivy screen, common in Europe, is effectively used at the side of the garden. Mr. Battles' idea is that, though the rear of a conservatory is generally a good place for rubbish, such an arrangement is not consistent with modern business in the present century.

Pennock Bros. have carried out the St. Valentine idea in a beautifully arranged window filled with little baskets of flowers suspended by ribbon with below them heart-shaped boxes and other pretty things.

Edward A. Stroud's paper on the Toronto convention, which appears in this issue, was not written for publication. Mr. Stroud gave his opinions on the varieties exhibited at Toronto for the benefit of his fellow members in the club only, but he was finally persuaded to allow this most excellent paper to be published.

George Chandler, of Kennett, was among the out-of-town visitors at the Florists' Club meeting last week.

William A. Mangan accompanied John E. Haines from South Bethlehem to this city last week. Mr. Mangan is Mr. Haines' grower.

William P. Craig says that Samuel Batchelor's Enchantress were the largest he ever saw.

Answers to Correspondents.

Review readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia, to Phil, in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

63.—How are White Perfection and Lady Bountiful for a small grower? Are they good bloomers?

Ans.—Yes, but you will probably do better by planting a freer blooming variety, such as Queen.

64.—What is the best and most productive variegated carnation?

Ans.—Mrs. Patten. But I would not plant too many variegated, as Enchantress nearly always outsells Patten.

65.—Name a few good fancy varieties of asters.

Ans.—Semples', Vick's or Carlson's.

66.—What prices would field-grown gladioli usually bring at the beginning of the season, and would they be ready sellers?

Ans.—Two dollars to $4 a hundred. They sell fairly well.

67.—Do spikes of florists' light-colored mixed gladioli bring good prices, or are named varieties preferable?

Ans.—Named varieties in scarlet, white, and soft pink are preferable, because, when there is an oversupply, which frequently happens, the poorer colors are unsalable.

68.—Are Augusta and America superior to others as cut spikes?

Ans.—Yes. They brought the highest price last season, $5 a hundred.

69.—What size box should be used for shipping?

Ans.—Opinions differ. Try boxes six feet long, twelve inches wide, and six inches deep. PHIL.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Not since the great blizzard of 1888 have we had in New York such a genuine case of winter as last week. You can best realize the quantity of "the beautiful" that fell by the fact that it costs the city a million dollars to remove it. The temperature hugged zero occasionally and 15 degrees above was a fair average for the week. This has served to make the cut flower industry an uncertain quantity. The growers' good prices are offset by a distressing scarcity of good stock. The wholesaler finds it hard to meet the regular demand for quantity and the retailer has found the public, apart from the natural increase in funerals, not enthusiastic. Then, too, the bears down in Wall street are squeezing the money spenders and, as a prominent Fifth avenue retailer said to me on Saturday, "Those rich brokers and bankers will not spend money for flowers when the market is going down;" and there you have the situation just as it is today.

Before the end of the present week everything may be seen through optimistic glasses. The sun may shine steadily, the roses take on color and quantity and balls and weddings grow more abundant. In fact, of the latter the bookings are very cheering. Each of the leading retailers has his books comfortably covered up to Easter. Lent began Wednesday, but less and less every year do the 400 or the 4,000 feel the influence of the religious sentiment that brings self-sacrifice. The modern Babylon, this greatest city of all the ages, has not enough old-fashioned orthodoxy left to use a barrel of ashes or a ream of sackcloth from Lent's beginning to its close.

Prices are about the same as a week ago; stock just about as scarce. Beauties, the best, have brought $12 per dozen. Brides and Maids were quoted at $12 to $15 per hundred, but a few could "go you five better," as the speculators say.

Carnations are down; the best from $6 to $8 and so on down to $1.50; many of them the worse for wear. Valley is everywhere and lots of it sold at $1 and $2. The best does not go over $3. Narcissi were so abundant last week one was justified in thinking the southern stock had already arrived. I heard one South Carolina lady visitor telling a retailer she "reckoned her yard was full of 'em in flower neow," and maybe it is. Lilac has gone down a peg and lilies are no more numerous and hold their advantage well at about double Easter prices, and Easter only seven weeks away.

Violets have had to hustle, or at least the distributors have, to realize 75 cents per hundred. Thousands were closed out at 50 cents Saturday, and quality is excellent. There promises to be a better market for St. Valentine's day. The finest orchids at times were down to 50 cents each but McManus says the demand is widening steadily.

Considerable stock of all kinds came in frozen last week. We have so little winter around the city, shippers grow careless and run into weather that it does not do to tamper with. The early market some days was almost deserted. Only nine growers materialized the morning of the big storm. No wonder Rudolph Fischer, the freesia man, is going to California.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club's meeting Monday evening, February 11, was largely attended. President Totty occupied the chair. The exhibits of carnations and other flowers were extensive and beautiful. Business engagements prevented the attendance of the canteen officer, and Will Rickards and Bobby Schultz filled his shoes acceptably. The outing committee reported a grove secured for July 2 and all other details under way.

Henry Hornecker, R. E. Berry, Albert Weisenberger, A. Begerow, A. F. Faulkner and Geo. E. Dickinson were elected to membership and Messrs. Eccles, Kennedy, Pause and Geraghty proposed. Some suggestions in the president's address were discussed, the formation of a bowling club among them. The enthusiasm in behalf of a club backed by the organization did not materialize. An independent club to meet in the afternoon is in process of arrangement, however, and will soon be in operation.

The committee on closer relation with the S. A. F. was instructed to report at the next meeting. The resignation of Edward Hitchings, now of Pasadena, Cal., was accepted. The exhibits were:

A vase of Welcome carnations by Dailledouze Bros. The committee visited this firm January 17 and awarded the flower 91½ points. The thanks of the club were given the exhibitors.

Toreador, from H. Weber & Sons, scored 87 points and received a preliminary certificate. Mabelle, from the same firm, was not in condition for exhibition.

Pink Imperial and Imperial, from Guttman & Haines, were not in condition.

A vase of Winsor, from F. R. Pierson Co. and already certified, received the thanks of the club.

From F. Boulon & Son came fine Princess of Wales violets.

Twelve vases of sweet peas, all new varieties, from A. C. Zvolanek received a cultural certificate.

Carnation Georgia scored 80 points and Harvard 86, the latter receiving a preliminary certificate. These were from J. D. Cockcroft.

A pink seedling carnation from E. L. Enggren, Aqueduct, L. I., the committee asked to have again exhibited.

Winsome, from John Reimels, Woodhaven, L. I., was not in condition. Seedling No. 32, scarlet, scored 85 points and received a preliminary certificate.

A. J. Guttman gave an interesting talk on the Toronto convention, especially referring to the cordiality and hospitableness of the Canadian brethren. He referred to the quality of the exhibits, the splendid banquet and the value of its trade press, and the right of carnation growers to be jubilant, warning the rose men of the growing appreciation of the public for the carnation.

Messrs. O'Mara and Birnie gave interesting addresses inspired by the excellent papers read at the convention, and Messrs. Young, Traendly, Butterfield and Shaw gave testimony to the success of the Canadian convention. A vote of thanks was given the Toronto Florists' Club for its devotion to the happiness of the New York visitors.

Various Notes.

The Florists' Club's annual dinner is set for February 23. W. F. Sheridan tells me there will be 100 at least at the table and that the tickets are selling fast. It is necessary the committee should know without further delay if you can go, so that preparations may be made for your enjoyment. There will be fine music and vaudeville, speech and song out of the beaten rut, and unique features that will make the occasion worthy of the fast growing organization.

Ferdinand Schupp, of Union Hill, for thirty years a prosperous florist there and a successful grower, is ill. He is about 70 years old. His specialty has always been the Jacq. rose. He is a native of Alsace.

Drew Scott, of Alex. McConnell's force, is severely ill at his home in New Rochelle. George McGarrett, Mr. McConnell's bookkeeper for fifteen years, received a handsome girl baby as his holiday present on New Year's eve.

Mr. McConnell's windows are wonderfully spring-like, with forsythia, lilac, and apple blossoms from his own greenhouses. Mr. McConnell is making a specialty of shrub forcing for his retail use and with great success.

John Miller, late with the Wadley & Smythe nurseries at Yonkers, is now in charge of the Tiffany estate at Laurelton hall, Cold Spring Harbor, L. I.

John A. Evans and N. P. Miller, of Richmond, Ind., are in the city in connection with the installing of a large ventilating contract. Mr. Miller remains in charge and Mr. Evans will return to Richmond this week. They report last year's business breaking all records and the present year to date ahead of any of its predecessors.

Robert E. Berry contemplates locating in the vicinity of New York and taking up the growing business in preference to landscape work, in which line he has been an expert for many years.

The sympathy of the trade is extended to William Hackland, bookkeeper for the New York Cut Flower Co., in the loss of his mother.

W. H. Gunther celebrates his forty-sixth birthday on St. Valentine's day. Twenty-six years in the wholesale business has left few wrinkles or gray hairs.

A. M. Henshaw handles a high grade of Jersey roses, a specialty he refers to with commendable pride. His brother, William, at Summit, has been ill with the prevailing malady.

W. H. Donohoe also has had a week of the grip and was unable for several days to attend to business. He has been busy with dinners lately, at one of which 2,200 red and white carnations were used. The popular method was employed, the flowers being made up in bunches and afterwards used as favors.

John Coan, formerly in charge of the plant department for Bloomingdale Bros., will open a store March 1 on Fifty-ninth street and Madison avenue.

Wernz & Koehne, the new firm at Christianson's old stand, report a prosperous season. Mr. Koehne is an active member of the Florists' Club.

held a special meeting Monday afternoon in New York. The convention premium list and program is ready for distribution.

Leikens' smile is perennial; a ball Saturday and two on Monday, all big ones, is a record.

Myer, at Fifty-eighth street and Madison avenue, had a large wedding decoration at St. George's Church February 5.

Brooklyn.

Business among the wholesalers of Brooklyn is progressing satisfactorily. But in no other city, perhaps, in the country does the same system of distribution prevail. Without the telephone there would be no wholesaling in the city of churches. Every order comes by phone and delivery is made by boy express. The number of youngsters kept hustling up to noon delivering the goods would surprise you. Some of the wholesalers have a dozen on the list of "get theres." It is the custom made natural by years of New York tuition before Brooklyn boasted a wholesale florist, and the habit cannot be overcome. Bonnet & Blake, W. H. Kuebler, Hicks & Crawbuck and Henry R. Crawbuck make up the quartet and their large, up-to-date establishments and growing trade speak encouragingly for the system and hopefully for the future. The number of retail florists in Brooklyn at the present rate of increase ought to total half a thousand before 1908.

J. Austin Shaw.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Weather conditions were against the retail trade last week and the week ended with not much doing except funeral work, a few small weddings and dinner parties.

The wholesalers have been up against it on roses the last two weeks. Extra fine, long Beauties are out of question in this market and, of course, prices are away up on all stock.

Carnations have been abundant but are cleaned up pretty well each morning, owing to the scarcity of roses. More Enchantress than any other variety is in the market. There are a few extra fancy Lawson. There are plenty of splits in reds; plenty of all grades in white.

Violets are somewhat scarce. Extra quality California are up to 75 cents and $1 per hundred.

Callas are coming in more freely. Some extra fine valley is seen in the market this week. Paper Whites are scarce.

Romans are equal to all demands, also jonquils. Few daffodils are in as yet. There are plenty of short freesias and a few sweet peas. Everything in greens is to be had.

Various Notes.

Martin Reukauf, of H. Byersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia, was with us last week. E. C. Pruner, representing E. F. Winterson Co., Chicago, also was a visitor.

W. J. Pilcher, of Kirkwood, was in last week buying glass for two new houses, 25x200, which will be put up this spring. This will put Mr. Pilcher back among the growers again.

F. W. Ude, Jr., of Kirkwood, was a caller last week. Mr. Ude is cutting a fine lot of Prosperity carnations and California violets which are consigned to H. G. Berning.

W. C. Smith, chairman of the Florists' Club trustees, says he will call a meeting some time this week and arrange for a suitable entertainment for the twentieth anniversary of the club, June 28.

The greenhouses of Adolph Brix, on Mead avenue, are in excellent order and the stock is strictly first-class. This place is in charge of Henry Braum. Mr. Brix's store, on St. Louis avenue, is full of fine stock of all kinds and business is reported good.

C. A. Kuehn and J. J. Beneke spent Sunday in Kansas City, visiting some of the trade.

A. Berdan is supplying W. C. Smith & Co. with a fine lot of bulbous stock, such as Romans, Paper Whites and lily of the valley. Mr. Berdan is the only one growing valley around Kirkwood.

The stockholders of the Dole Floral Co. held their annual meeting January 21 and elected Mrs. S. H. Dole, Edward W. Dole and W. A. Dole directors for the year 1907. The directors elected Edward W. Dole president and manager; Mrs. S. H. Dole, vice-president, and W. A. Dole, secretary-treasurer. A cash dividend of 10 per cent was declared. The wages of all the employees of the company were increased about twenty per cent over the wages paid last winter.

The business of the company was begun sixteen years ago in a small way and during the dry years was operated with borrowed capital and at a loss, but since the beginning of general prosperity the business has had a steady growth. In 1903 the company purchased a lot at 215 North Sixth street and the following spring built the store now occupied. In 1904 the business was incorporated as a stock company and five acres of land purchased at Fifth and Hoyt streets. In 1905 the present greenhouses were built and the west side greenhouses were dismantled. In 1906 one greenhouse was added for growing winter lettuce, and twelve acres of land purchased for gardening.

Lawrence, Kan.—C. A. Hicks is displaying a new seedling carnation, variegated pink and white, which he has named Hick's Hybrid.

Burlington, Vt.—C. August Gebicke has an attractive store at 32 Church street and a greenhouse at the corner of Mansfield and Colchester avenues. He is a German of scientific and artistic proficiency in floriculture. He grows violets, roses, carnations and other cut flowers. He also handles palms, rubber trees, ferns and potted plants. His services are much in demand for all kinds of decorations.

Vegetable Forcing.

HENRY PHILLIP, Rogers Park, Chicago, was given the opportunity of testing the Davis Perfect cucumber before arrangements had been made for its distribution to the trade and reports being well pleased with the results obtained with it.

MARKET gardeners at Rochester, N. Y., use quite largely a cucumber called The Howard, both for forcing and for outdoors. James Vick's Sons say the variety is the result of a cross between Arlington White Spine and Improved Long Green.

ALL melon growers are familiar with the superior flavor and aroma of the salmon-fleshed varieties, such as Osage and Emerald Gem, but the flesh of these fine melons is too soft for long shipments. It is said this defect has been remedied in the new Burrell Gem.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 13.—Cucumbers, $1 to $2 doz.; lettuce, 35c to 45c case; spinach, 50c to 75c box; radishes, 40c to 45c doz. bunches; tomatoes, 15c to 25c lb.; mushrooms, 35c to 60c lb.

NEW YORK, Feb. 12.—Mushrooms quite plentiful and meeting a fair outlet at late prices. Cucumbers firm, though comparatively few good enough to exceed $1.75. Lettuce steady, with some fancy marks bringing more than quoted. Mint scarce and high. Radishes firm. Rhubarb weak. Tomatoes steady. Cucumbers, 75c to $2 doz.; lettuce, 50c to $1 doz.; mushrooms, 35c to 60c lb.; mint, $1 to $1.50 doz. bunches; radishes, $4 to $5 per hundred bunches; parsley, 15c doz. bunches; tomatoes, 15c to 30c lb.

BOSTON, Feb. 11.—Cucumbers, $4 to $15 box; parsley, $1.50 to $2 box; radishes, 25c to 30c doz. bunches; lettuce, 25c to 75c doz.; mint, $1 to $1.25 doz. bunches; romaine, $1 doz.; escarolle, $1 doz.; tomatoes, 25c to 40c lb.; dandelions, $1.50 box; rhubarb, 5c to 6c lb.; mushrooms, 40c to 75c lb.; asparagus, $3 doz. bunches.

STARTING SPRING PLANTS.

Cabbage and cauliflower seeds should be sown without delay, to allow time to make plants of good size without having to hurry them, and to insure nice stocky plants. The best variety of cabbage to sow is Early Jersey Wakefield and the best early cauliflower is Snowball or Dwarf Erfurt. The seed of both these varieties of cauliflower is higher priced than the average run of varieties but they are sure to give satisfaction, and having customers satisfied is worth a little extra outlay.

A few onions also should be sown early. There seems to be an increasing demand for these for planting out, as those planted out attain a much larger size than those sown in the open ground. The Tripoli varieties are good for this purpose, also Prizetaker. The seed of the latter can now be procured about as cheaply as that of the ordinary varieties.

Tomatoes had better be started toward the end of the month or at the beginning of March. The trouble in sowing them too soon is that they are apt to be too large and leggy before time to plant out. The varieties of these are so numerous that it is hard to make a selection, but there can be no mistake in sowing some of the old reliable varieties, such as Acme, Stone or Livingston's Perfection for main crop. For early, Spark's

WATKINS & SIMPSON, SEED MERCHANTS, 12 Tavistock St., Covent Garden, LONDON, ENG.

Earliana seems to succeed splendidly in some sections, while in others it is not so satisfactory. We have found Sterling Castle good for early work and it seems to succeed everywhere.

Egg plants and peppers should be sown about the same time as tomatoes. The old New York Spineless egg plant is a good, reliable sort and the newer variety, Black Beauty, seems to give general satisfaction, while some have a preference for Black Pekin. In peppers Ruby King and Sweet Mountain are both good, large varieties and for those who prefer a medium size there is nothing better than County Fair.

For all these seeds, when plants are to be raised in quantity, flats are best for sowing. These should be made of a uniform size, so that they will fit evenly into the greenhouse benches, and should be about three inches in depth. Soil of a rather light nature is best to use, as heavy soil is apt to bake and retard the coming up of the seedlings. In sections where the soil is heavy it is better to lighten it by the addition of sand, or sand and leaf-mold. It is not necessary to sift all the soil for filling the flats, so long as it is not too lumpy, but that used for the covering of the seeds is better to be sifted. Heavy covering should be avoided. A safe rule is to cover the seeds to about their own depth. If the soil used is moderately moist only a slight sprinkling of water will be necessary after sowing. If the soil should be too dry it is better to give a good watering after the flats are filled and allow them to drain off well before sowing the seeds.

Shading is beneficial until the seeds have started, as it helps to retain the moisture in the soil and avoids the necessity of too frequent applications of water, which would harden the surface of the soil and make it harder for the seedlings to break through. If the whole bench where the flats are placed can be shaded by cheese-cloth, or some such material, it is the most convenient way, but if this is not convenient papers can be spread over the flats during the warm part of the day and removed as the sun gets low. It takes a little time, but it insures a better start than if the flats are left exposed to the full glare of the sun, which would dry the soil out so quickly that an even moisture could not be maintained. The maintenance of an even moisture is the best preventive of damping off, which otherwise is often a serious trouble in the raising of young plants of this class. It stands to reason that exposure to the full glare of the sun, causing dryness, on the one hand, and frequent soakings of water, on the other, are two extremes which are sure to result in injury to the plants in a young and tender state, leaving them an easy prey to the attacks of fungus, which causes what is usually termed damping off.

W. S. CROYDON.

THE GLOOMIEST EVER.

Winter gloom and darkness is a climatic feature always anticipated and discounted by glasshouse gardeners in northern latitudes, but the current season appears to have broken all records for sustained dreariness. The deficiency of average seasonal sunlight began in early autumn and, with the exception of a single week of brilliant weather in November, there has been almost continual murkiness, depressing the vitality of growing plants to a most unusual degree, weakening blooms, causing them to come off-color, with lank and sappy stems, and sharply curtailing the output.

Vegetable growers are having a particularly trying time in getting cucumber and tomato blooms to set. In fact, the majority of blooms failed to advance even to the stage of pollination, but withered without opening. This shortage is reflected in higher quotations for glasshouse products, but increased prices do not in every instance compensate for such light crops. The few clear days we have had between weeks of dullness found indoor plants so tender that especial care was needed in watering and ventilation to keep them from flagging.

Modern greenhouse construction seeks a maximum of lighting surface, as we can well control heat and moisture, but must depend on natural conditions for light. Fairly successful experiments have been made from time to time with artificial lights to tide over the dreary season of short days and frequent storms. Electric illumination in the form of arc lights outside the glass and incandescent globes within were advocated some years ago, says the Rural New-Yorker, and the former used near Boston with a claim of commercial success by a practical greenhouse lettuce grower. More recent trials at Cornell Experiment Station show that acetylene affords a light more congenial to plant life, and there is promise that this means of illumination may economically be used in the depths of winter for glasshouse leaf and root crops, such as lettuce or radishes, though probably not for fruits or flowers.

Seed Trade News.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

R. C. Steele, president of the Steele-Briggs Seed Co., February 5 was elected by acclamation president of the Toronto Board of Trade.

In Joseph Breck & Sons' catalogue there is a "roll of honor," being the names of a large number of customers who have done business with the firm for from forty to seventy years. The house was established in Boston in 1822.

Certain shipments of Dutch bulbs which reached the appraisers' store at Chicago the latter part of August were released the first week in February. In these cases the proverbial slowness of the government was not to blame; the trouble came from invoice irregularities.

Johnson & Musser Seed Co., Los Angeles, is out for the trade of all nations. In its 1907 catalogue four languages are used, including Spanish, Chinese and Japanese, with a dozen or more portraits of customers of the last two nationalities, who are a decided factor in the market gardening of southern California.

Visitors at Des Moines, Ia., last week were unusually numerous, including: Chas. P. Braslan, San Jose, Cal.; Wm. Hagemann, New York city; Professor Brown, of the pure seed division of the agricultural department, Washington; Mr. Steinmetz, of W. W. Barnard Co., Chicago; Mr. Johnson, of the Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago; Mr. Crossland, of Northrup, King & Co., Minneapolis;

TO THE TRADE
We desire to announce that because of the heavy and continuous rains, our planting has been delayed so that the writer was not able to leave for the east as early as had been expected. He hopes, however, to get away about the end of this month and will advise the trade later when he expects to call.

W. W. Hoisington, of the Alfred J. Brown Seed Co., Grand Rapids; Carl Cropp, of Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, and several of the Holland bulb men.

The double invoice system will not apply to 1907 bulb importations.

Mail trade is somewhat behind last year to date, according to reports.

It seems that no matter how short seed stocks may be in a general way, there are always lists of surpluses floating about.

Cratz Bros., one of the oldest clover seed concerns at Toledo, closed its doors February 11. The sum involved in the failure is not yet known.

Will H. Dildine has charge of the wholesale department of James Vick's Sons, Rochester, N. Y. The firm is developing this end of the business.

It is said that, next to Burpee, the Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, carries the largest stock and list of varieties of sweet peas to be found in this country.

The 1907 catalogues devote increased space to poultry supplies, while with many seed houses this department is now of sufficient importance to call for a special book.

The death is reported of Mrs. Kurtzweil, mother of Mathias Kurtzweil, president of the Iowa Seed Co., Des Moines. She was 78 years of age and leaves her husband and one son.

Advance orders for a general line of seeds on the pro-rata crop basis are considerably easier to book this season than ordinarily, and reports are that business along this line is flourishing.

One of the good things for which the trade is indebted to the explorations of the Department of Agriculture is the Maliner-Kren horseradish, found in Bohemia several years ago by David Fairchild.

A representative of D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, who has been traveling through Wisconsin on business for his firm, says that the people in that state are more prosperous than in any other state he has visited.

It is reported that Huntington & Page, Indianapolis, would, were it possible to dispose of the catalogue and retail end of the business on satisfactory terms, confine themselves to and enlarge the growing and wholesale end.

It is noticeable that the seed trade is giving closer attention to the needs of the vegetable forcers, truckers and market gardeners who buy in bulk and leave the packet trade more or less to look after itself in the general scramble.

Walter P. Stokes says that it has never been, nor will it be, his policy to compete for business on the matter of price. In the first general catalogue of Stokes' Seed Store it is stated: "The prices are such as will enable us to pay my grower an extra fee for taking that care of the growing stocks which is necessary to produce the best results. Under close competition, the price paid the grower has been cut in some cases to a point where it is impossible for him to give that care and attention in roguing and selecting which is absolutely essential in producing best results. I am paying this extra price for extra care and extra attention throughout the entire process of growing and gathering the seed."

W. H. Barrett, Adrian, Mich., has issued a neat, illustrated booklet describing his methods of growing tomato seed. He says his ambition is not wholly commercial and confines his attention to twelve varieties, Chalk's Early Jewel being added to the list this season.

In the Montgomery Ward & Co. seed catalogue "all prices of seeds are net and do not include free transit, but are shipped at buyer's expense. In ordering please remember to allow sufficient postage. If you send too much money we will refund the difference, or omit some article if not enough." Most catalogue seed houses find it saves trouble to include carriage charges in the price of all stock quoted by the packet and pound.

The Chas. H. Lilly Co., Seattle, Wash., has 100 acres in cabbages for 1907 seed crop and reports all the leading houses interested in Puget Sound cabbage seed. They do not meet European prices, but are able to grow at reasonable cost, one of the advantages being that the stock can be wintered in the field, 6 degrees of frost being the coldest recorded last winter. The seed is grown on contract with gardeners, from one to as high as six acres with each, and carefully rogued. A. J. Milton, of the Lilly Co., is now visiting the trade in the east.

LILIUM LONGIFLORUM.

Happily there is now presented to the bulb forcer a new source of supply, and such as promises to far exceed the old source in quantity and quality, and at a much less cost both of initial price and cost of freight to England, says a writer in the Horticultural Trade Journal. I am referring to the new cultivations in Azores islands, which are rapidly gaining considerable importance and reputation for improved quality, more especially in America. In the course of the last twelve months I have frequently come across sample growths of these new importations in England, and in all cases the quality is far in advance of anything I have seen in my experience of Japan or Bermuda bulbs. The type is quite distinct and the bulbs absolutely free from disease—a deformed bloom is absolutely unknown. The flowers are perhaps smaller than those from bulbs from Japan, but they are of very solid and thick texture, with a total absence of the thin, watery flowers seen on the eximium type, giving one more the impression of the giganteum type in the thickness of the petals. The stem, too, is very clean and sturdy, no canes or supports whatever are needed; and what is perhaps of the greatest value, they are more floriferous.

When the stock in the islands is worked up sufficiently large, the price will come at about half now paid to Japan. The islands are on the West Coast of Africa, in about the same latitude as the islands of Bermuda. They are possessions of the Portuguese, and as the Bermudas are to America, so the Azores are a health resort for Europeans. The labor is, of course, Portuguese, but some English and German labor is being imported. English speculators do not appear to be ahead of other countries, or even alongside them, in taking up the growing or handling of longiflorums from these islands. I am informed that already some German firms are prospecting the possibilities of the trade for the English and American markets, and if practical, sending out capital in the hands of responsible agents, with the intention of ear marking the principal cultivations; and also I know some of the leading American seed houses have made contracts with agents at the Azores for an increasing and continuous supply. So far it has not come within my knowledge of any English growers or importers taking any interest in the matter, although some of our leading firms have been approached on the subject. It will be a great pity and in fact a great loss to the English horticultural trade and the lilium importing trade in particular if this promising and important source of supply is allowed to pass into the hands of the German and American merchants and importers. The trade would welcome a purely English concern that imported and supplied these bulbs, and my object in referring at this length to this matter is in the hopes that the enterprise of our home firms may at least take a share of the valuable trade in bulbs from this new source, and not allow foreign competitors to have it entirely in their own hands, with a consequent great loss to the English dealers and growers.

TOLEDO GRASS SEED MARKET.

Toledo, O., Feb. 6.—The Toledo seed dealers are in the midst of one of the most peculiar situations ever known on this market. Foreign seed has taken the place of domestic in the east, forcing the local dealers to sell off and meet the competition. Imports at New York last week were 4,700 bags of foreign seed, the largest amount ever known to have been sent to this country. Most of the foreign seed has stopped in Baltimore and other eastern cities, but that which has found its way to this market has been of unusually high grade, as shown by government inspection.

The fact is, however, that little seed of any kind can be obtained on this market at the present time. The demand for seed has been so light that the supply has not had to be large; consequently a large demand finds the market nearly bare. Toledo dealers have tried to use as little foreign seed as possible.

The market is 70 cents lower than its high point and 50 cents lower than last Saturday. The farmers have also become frightened and started to unload their seed and have helped the foreign importations to put the market down much lower.

Toledo, O., Feb. 11.—Cloverseed—Cash, $8.05; February, $8.05; March, $8.10; April, $7.92½; timothy, $2.10; alsike, $7.62½.

—from St. Louis to the seaboard. He claims most dealers are afraid of a repetition of last year's experience, and say they will only buy from hand to mouth. Stocks light, and he is positive that few of the large dealers have any quantity of foreign seed in transit, so we are liable to get any old kind of a market from this on. The demand is going to be a large one and whether there is enough foreign seed coming to fill vacancies is a question."

CLOVER AND GRASS REPORT.

The London wholesale trade has issued the annual report on grass and clover seeds. English red clover is said to be the largest crop on record, the whole being harvested in fine condition, but, as predicted in my previous notes to the Review, prices are maintained at a satisfactory level. The exceptionally fine quality has tempted much foreign trade and immense quantities are being shipped to pratically every market in Europe. Practically all the European producing centers are a short crop.

There are reports of a good crop in Chile, but an increased demand has sprung up from the United States, even so far as to be worth while to reship some Chilean supplies to the States, where values appear to be fully maintained.

White clover has done well through the whole season and the quantity is much above the average. The quality is above the average. Continental supplies of this article are perhaps somewhat better than the English. The price is at present lower than the supply seems to warrant.

The growth of clover, especially red, is much on the increase in the United Kingdom and in consequence of the heavy home crop it is anticipated a much larger acreage than the average will be sown for forage purposes.

In rye grasses and natural grasses the crops, taking the whole of Europe, may be said to be slightly below the average in quantity and already some natural grasses are ruling higher than last year, timothy included, which apears to be in short supply on both continents. Sainfoin and lucerne both are in full supply, of above average quality. Prices so far are lower than usual, but as supplies in America are almost nil prices may considerably improve. Prices are already ruling considerably higher on the continent than in England.

Taken as a whole, great care will need to be exercised in making wholesale purchases this season, of either clovers or grasses. B. J.

DUTCH BULB PROSPECTS.

The advance guard of the Dutch bulb travelers has already landed in America, and probably an increased number will visit the United States this year. It is perhaps a little difficult to forecast the probable prices, during deliveries of 1907, for all classes of Dutch bulbs, but for two principal items, tulips and daffodils, I think it is fairly safe to predict fairly high prices, probably fully as high as prevailed during May and June of last year, but yet not so high as the prices obtained for sales made during the time of shipment. The reasons which lead me to these conclusions are several, chief among them being the fact that all sorts of daffodils and narcissi as cut bloom are this season realizing fair prices in all parts of the world. A much reduced acreage was planted last autumn in Holland for stock purposes.

JOHNSON SEED COMPANY, 217 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Herbert W. Johnson of the late firm of Johnson & Stokes, President.

Mention The Review when you write.

The English market grower will be a greatly increased customer during the coming season, against which there is a much smaller stock in Holland to come upon the market in 1907. This class of bulb is also increasing in demand in other countries. It is also significant that daffodils did not figure to any extent in the purchases made by the new growers who last year established themselves in the north of Holland. Probably they will be required by these growers next season.

Tulips, on account of large export demand of last year and the large quantity of bulbs used for stock in the new cultures mentioned above, were planted in decreased quantities, against a probably increased demand for both foreign and bedding sorts, especially the former, from all over the world, and particularly in England. As to the crop outlook, it is too early to say much with accuracy, but, all things considered, the bulb trade shows brighter prospects for all those concerned, both bulb and flower growers, than has been the case for some years. The Market.

Business remains about the same. A few dull days toward the end of the week tended to pile up stock. Carnations, especially Enchantress and Lawson, are plentiful, but the price is still up. White carnations are short. Roses are scarce; in fact, it is almost impossible to get grades for work. Bulbous stock is arriving in large quantities. Violets sell fairly well.

Club Meeting.

A carnation exhibit held in connection with the Florists' Club's last meeting brought forth an unusually large attendance. Treasurer Walter Taepke was kept busy making out receipts for dues. Lewis F. Tossey was elected a member. Murry G. Patterson's application for membership was received. The next regular meeting night, February 20, will be given over to an entertainment and dancing party at Harmonie hall. The ladies and all florists' employees are cordially invited to favor the members with their presence.

George Browne gave an interesting as well as amusing description of the trip to Toronto. The treatment accorded the visitors by the Toronto men was simply great. Mr. Browne says "the banquet was the best ever; the decorations were superb." During a trip about the city the absence of beer signs and billboards impressed the visitors. A side trip to Dunlop's and the Dale Estate proved interesting.

During Mr. Browne's talk on Toronto a committee of three, consisting of C. H. Plumb, George Rackham and Fred Pantke, was appointed to inspect the following exhibits:

Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, a vase of Red Riding Hood, which carried remarkably well and showed up fine. A vase of Aristocrat showed up fine and no doubt will sell some stock for the company. A vase of White Perfection, of good form and fine pure white.

F. R. Pierson Co., Tarrytown, a vase of Winsor, fine color, stem and form; good variety if prolific. White Enchantress did not carry well; not pure white.

A. J. Stahelin, of Redford, a most creditable exhibit, showing ten varieties of carnations, as follows: A vase of 100 White Lawson, very fine; a vase of 100 Schroeter's Rose-pink Enchantress, fine color, large flowers; a vase of Enchantress, Harlowarden, Mrs. M. A. Patten, Nelson Fisher, Lawson, and a Variegated Lawson, all well grown. He also showed a red seedling and a white seedling of a fine form, both good producers.

August Von Boeselager, Mt. Clemens, showed a vase of Moonlight, a pure white, large flower, a good producer, and does not seem to split. He also showed a vase of his pink Lawson; it is identically the same as Lawson, only of a light rose-pink shade.

Thomas Browne showed his White Enchantress. This received most favorable comment from the committee.

Leopold Mallest staged a vase of fifty Lawsons that were winners, on elegant long stems, fine, large, perfect flowers and fine color. He also showed a few hundred violets, about the size of a half-dollar and very fragrant.

C. H. Plumb proved to the boys that twenty-five blooms of Von Sion could be cut from one 8-inch pan. He also showed a fine lot of Golden Spur.

The exhibits were not as plentiful as in 1906, but the scarcity of stock probably accounts for this.

In recognition of his special efforts in this and on previous occasions, A. J. Stahelin was asked to read a paper on "Carnations" and also give a short review of his life. Mr. Stahelin, who is but a young man and has been growing carnations for only the last four years, has had remarkable success. He was in the employ of the Chicago Carnation Co. for about three months, picking up ideas on building; then he built one house 24x200 at Redford, Mich., where he now has about 20,000 feet of glass.

The glut several years ago nearly put him out of business, but he was not to be discouraged. His paper is to be read March 6, when J. F. Sullivan has also promised to read a paper on "Why You Should Attend Club Meetings."

Various Notes.

No doubt the friends of Thos. Browne will be pleased to learn of his partial recovery.

At the last meeting of the Detroit Florists' Club, which is well represented in the S. A. F., a motion was made and carried emphatically protesting against the changing of the convention date. It is impossible for storemen and most growers to get away during November and, owing to the uncertainty of the weather, it is a hard matter to ship plants at that time. All this would surely have a tendency to reduce the attendance, which would be fatal to our society.

Visitors: Paul Berkowitz, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., Philadelphia; G. F. Struck, Summit, N. J.; S. S. Skidelsky, Philadelphia; Chas. Schwake, representing C. F. Meyer, New York; Louis Bronkhurst, representing N. F. McCarthy & Co., Boston; R. C. Whitehill, representing Benj. Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y., and several Dutch bulb canvassers.

WATERING PRIMULAS.

When primulas are grown in a high temperature there is not much danger of harming them in watering, unless the wielder of the water-can is more than usually careless. In a cooler structure the case is different, and even a careful man may do damage with the water-pot unless he brings a little intelligence to bear. The roots of Chinese primulas are extremely fine, and even when the plants are in full flower, rarely seem to have taken complete possession of the soil. For this reason the soil is easily soured, and sour soil means death to many of the finest roots. Few young beginners are so careless in the use of the pot as to cause established plants to rot off at the collar, but many of them cannot keep the foliage healthy and unspotted; and the foliage of many primulas is a valuable asset.—Gardeners' Magazine.

MILWAUKEE.

The Market.

There was a marked improvement in trade last week. Everything sold out clean and prices were firm. Plenty of funeral work caused heavy demand on light-colored stock. Violets also moved better. Prices ruled about the same as the previous week, but none were left over.

Bulb stock is coming in more freely, but the general shortage keeps it moving at good figures. The supply of green goods is shortening up. Smilax is scarce, also Sprengeri, but plenty of plumosus is on the market. Valley is plentiful. There is some stevia still coming in, but the quality is on the wane. Callas are coming in more freely, but the supply is still unequal to the demand.

Various Notes.

Alexander Klockner read a paper on "Landscape Gardening" at the Florists' Club's meeting February 7. There was a good attendance and the paper brought out considerable discussion. It was an able paper, covering all points on landscape work, and was much appreciated.

Nick Zweifel is still on the sick list, but is on the road to recovery.

With the beginning of Lent there appears to be a good crop of flowers arriving in all lines. The supply of roses is increasing daily.

Cedar Rapids, Ia.—I. N. Kramer & Son moved to their new location, 318 Third avenue, February 5.

Davenport, Ia.—E. L. Pope, of the Allison & Pope Co., has sold out his interest in the business to Mrs. Amelia Miller.

WILLIAM SAUNDERS
The flowers are large, of splendid form, and are borne very freely in immense clusters. The color is a deep rich shining scarlet slightly dappled with crimson. Foliage is a rich bronze. Height, 3½ to 4 feet. We believe that Wm. Saunders is decidedly the most perfect Canna of this type that has been introduced. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

OTTAWA
Is a strong grower, very robust and 5 to 6 feet high. The flowers are large and beautifully formed, color is carmine with tints of old rose and deep coral, add to this the silken sheen and you can imagine the effect a few plants will produce.
NOTE—We had this Canna on trial among the Canadian experimental stations last summer and this is the official report of their expert: "Quite distinct and one of the most beautiful shades of color I ever saw in Cannas. Of 70 massed in one bed during the past season, this was the most floriferous in the collection, coming into bloom early and continuing until cut down by frost, as many as 13 expanded heads of blooms being counted at one time on a plant, and not a poor one among them, all being of immense size." 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

NEW YORK
Has the Orchid type of flower. They have much more substance than the flowers of the other varieties of this class, and will stand the hot sunshine as well as the toughest varieties of cannas. The color is a solid rich scarlet covered with a beautiful glowing sheen. The flowers are large and contrast beautifully with the dark bronze foliage. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.
Send for our list and prices of 60 other leading varieties of Cannas.
ROSES, are our great specialty, 2¼ and 4-inch pot plants we have in great variety — Philadelphia Rambler, Crimson Rambler, Dorothy Perkins and other climbers in strong field plants.

TROUBLE WITH BURSAS.

I am head gardener at the Carnegie Biological Station for the Study of Experimental Evolution and am growing many things that have never been cultivated before, most of which are common weeds. I am growing Bursa capselus, but just about the time they should be putting up the flowering stalk they come to a standstill and refuse to grow any more. On examination I found an enlargement near the surface of the soil on all of them, just as you will on the specimens enclosed. Can you suggest any remedy? L. M.

We regret our inability to determine, from specimens received, what is the trouble with the roots of the plants enclosed. These root-galls are common on many of our native weeds, in addition to cultivated plants. Probably the soil is lacking in one of the essentials of plant food. An application of lime should prove beneficial. We would recommend, however, sending samples of both roots and soil to your state experiment station if the trouble is at all general. The college staff would no doubt be able to help you. W. N. C.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

R. J. Coe, the Fort Atkinson nurseryman, has been elected president of the Wisconsin State Horticultural Society.

It is reported from Painesville, O., that the Storrs & Harrison Co. began mailing its catalogue January 14 and the postage will run in the neighborhood of $6,000.

The post-office at Newark, N. Y., derives most of its revenue from the nursery trade and a nurseryman is now postmaster there, J. M. Pitkin, of C. W. Stuart & Co.

The firm of Hacker & Norman, Painesvill, O., composed of Rudolph Hacker and Ralph Norman, has been growing nursery and herbaceous stock the last three years. They recently purchased a farm from B. Park to increase their plantings.

A. J. Young, Aurora, Ill., says that his firm, the Aurora Nursery Co., has a big season in sight, the orders for spring delivery being far more numerous and heavier than at this date last year. A specialty is made of ornamental stock, principally shrubbery.

The Board of General Appraisers at the New York custom house February 9 advanced the valuation of two shipments of 3-foot box trees from Schaum & Van Tol, Boskoop, Holland, from $27 to $28 per hundred, adding packing and cases; discount five per cent.

In the reorganization of the Conard & Jones Co., West Grove, Pa., following the death of its president, A. F. Conard, Mark Hughes, who for many years was associated with the Dingee & Conard Co., was elected a member of the board of directors. The following officers were elected: President, Robert Pyle; vice-president, Antoine Wintzer; treasurer, S. Morris Jones; secretary, Roland T. Satterthwait.

PLANTING EVERGREENS.

Evergreens are excellent subjects for the decoration of home grounds. In suburban grounds they do well as screens for unsightly objects. In planting them it must be remembered to carefully take into consideration the ultimate size and spread to which the trees will attain. Do not plant too thickly, as a cluttered lawn is unwholesome and unsightly and few persons have the courage to take out a tree which they have grown for several years.

For low hedges, the arbor-vitæ is excellent, the American variety taking the lead. The white and blue spruces, the red cedars, Austrian pine, cluster pine and balsam fir are also excellent. For its compact growth, beautiful color and symmetrical shape, the blue spruce is best for single specimens in lawn planting. For grouping in large grounds, the pines and Norway spruces are excellent. Single specimens have to be planted in sod, and it should be remembered that it is a waste of time to put any tree into a tough sod where a hole barely large enough to receive the roots has been dug. The right way is to cut out a circle at least four feet across, peel off the sod, and spade up the soil thoroughly and deeply. The surface of the ground in this circle should be kept well cultivated for three years before grass is again allowed to grow over it.

For screening outbuildings in suburban grounds, spruces are excellent. They should be planted equal distances apart, and sufficiently distant to allow perfect specimens to develop without crowding. The National Council of Horticulture indicates that the point to be sought in growing evergreens is to plant sparingly and seek to develop perfect specimens.

PREMIUM BERRIES.

For a number of years it has been the practice of the M. Crawford Co. to offer small premiums on orders; a few choice bulbs or a strawberry plant of some new variety, for each dollar received before a given time. The Kittie Rice, which has become so popular, was first given out by Mr. Crawford in this way, as No. 1,000. The Mrs. Miller was his premium two years ago, and it has already won a place. Last year it was Nehring's Gem. This spring they offer one first mentioned in their July report for 1904, as Peck's 99. Up to the present time it has been designated by number, but when they decided to let it go out they gave it the name of Helen Gould. It was originated by one of the veteran strawberry growers of Missouri, J. R. Peck, about ten years ago. In 1901 he sent it to Mr. Crawford on trial, and he was so well pleased with it the first time it fruited that he bought the entire stock.

TEXANS UNITE FORCES.

The Texas State Nut Growers' Association and committees of the Texas Nurserymen's Association and the State Horticultural Society held a joint meeting at Austin, Tex., February 7. The members went before the agricultural committee for the state legislature and presented the demands of the nut growers, the nurserymen and horticulturists and the south Texas truck growers for a better enforcement of protection to insectivorous birds. They asked a larger appropriation for nursery inspection.

The associations adjourned to meet again in July at College Station, with the farmers' convention.

20,000 PEONIES FOR EARLY SPRING PLANTING

This list comprises a great many choice and rare varieties, some of which have never before been offered to the trade in quantities. The stock is now in our storage sheds and can be shipped as soon as the weather will permit. Nothing but selected three to six eye divisions will be sent out.

PACIFIC COAST.

Los Angeles, Cal.—The flower venders have been debarred from selling on the street, pending a decision of the city attorney as to what class of licensees they belong in.

SAN FRANCISCO.

The Market.

Bright, warm weather is making everything extremely plentiful in the cut flower line. Violets are in their glory and the price has fallen twenty-five per cent during the last week, with an improvement in the quality of the blooms. Carnations, too, are beginning to show the advent of more desirable weather by richness of color and stiffness of stem. Roses are scarce yet and it will be a month at least before they will be in corresponding supply.

The greatest increase, however, is noticeable in bulbous stock. Narcissi, of the white variety, can be had at $5 per thousand and daffodils, both single and double, from $6 to $7.50 per thousand. Freesias are well to the front and cost the stores from $1 to $2.50 per hundred. Roman hyacinths are not in as good demand as in former years and valley moves slowly. A few early tulips are seen and there is a good demand for cut cyclamen, especially of the white varieties.

The new crop of adiantum will shortly be fit to cut and it will be a great relief to the retailers, as they have had much trouble for the last three months in getting sufficient green stuff with which to carry on business.

The state of trade is fair. Funeral work has been heavy with a large proportion of the dealers, with a good sprinkling of other lines of trade.

Various Notes.

John Jack, recently gardener to Lieutenant Winship, at Ross station, has accepted a position with the Sharon estate at Menlo Park.

William George, of Elmhurst, is cutting some of the finest daffodils ever sent to the San Francisco market. The soil in his neighborhood seems to be particularly adapted to their growth.

W. J. Graham, the well-known landscape gardener, of East Oakland, has embarked in the business of growing early cucumbers under glass. He has one large house planted and will shortly commence the erection of another.

Carl Swanson, for many years foreman for the Cox Seed Co., at Glen Echo, has branched out in landscape gardening on his own account.

D. J. Briggs, for many years interested in the nursery business in southern California, will locate permanently in the vicinity of San Francisco in the near future.

John McLaren estimates that it will take $175,000 to repair the various city parks and replant the shrubbery and grass plots, as well as at least two years of time, before they are in as good condition as they were before the advent of the camping of the refugees.

Alexander Frey has returned to the business and has taken a position with Gill's Floral Depot, Oakland.

The perplexing question of fuel, which has been a source of considerable anxiety to most of the growers, has been partially solved by the weather, which, although dark and rainy, has not been cold; so that depleted stocks have been saved entire annihilation for the time being.

John Becanne, of Alameda, reports trade fair in his town in the retail line. Mr. Becanne is one of the pioneers in this part of the world.

G. B. Lull, state forester, has sent out circular letters to all California nurserymen, inquiring as to the available stocks of the various varieties of eucalyptus on hand.

G.

SPOKANE, WASH.

C. E. Balzer, city florist, has a plan for beautifying Manito park and at the same time honoring the international convention of the Baptist Young People's Union, which meets here July 4 to 7 and which will be attended by delegates from all over the world. He will plat a 3-acre tract in the midst of the park, which will be planted to flowers with artistically aranged walks. The garden will lie on a knoll, with the highest point in the center. The crowning feature will be the emblem of the society complete in every detail, lettering, color scheme and all. The motto, "B. Y. P. U., Loyalty to Christ," and the stars and stripes of the United States shield, which is a part of the emblem, will be shown. The emblem will be 12x12, standing upright. The plants used will be chosen with respect to the various colors needed.

EVERGREEN HEDGES.

With the advent of a great deal of building and the laying out of grounds in this vicinity, it is noticeable that in many of our finest places the evergreen hedge is again much in evidence. For many years they have not been much planted, but the fact that there is a brisk demand at present for almost anything that is suitable for such a purpose is worthy of comment. Twenty-five years ago no one thought his planting was complete without a Monterey cypress hedge around it, and the fact that it could be kept at any desired height for any length of time argued much in its favor. About ten years ago many of our finest hedges were attacked by a small green aphis and thousands of trees died in a short time. They did not usually attack all the trees in a hedge, but picked out a few here and there, and these speedily died, leaving ugly gaps to be filled in with smaller trees. This blight continued here for several seasons and eventually disappeared, and has not been seen for at least five years. Many hedges were cut out and burned up and some other evergreen planted, or the hedge proposition dispensed with entirely.

There is now, however, a decided reaction in favor of hedges of some sort and, while the native Monterey cypress is not planted as freely as in former years, it still finds some favor for that purpose.

Pittosporums are being largely used, and of the various varieties suitable P. Eugenoides and P. tenuifolium seem to be the most valuable. The former sort has a large lemon-colored leaf, but does not make as dense a hedge as the other kind. Both grow readily from seed and are easily transplanted, and when once established they stand pruning very well. They can be kept at a reasonable height with but little trouble.

The Laurus Tinus is also a good tree for this purpose, and, in addition, is covered with masses of white blossoms continuously. California privet is not much used here, although it makes a

BEACON CARNATION

ORANGE-SCARLET

Do you want to keep the "Blues" and grow Beacon? You can't do both

ORIGINATED AT ELLIS, MASS.

Has been Tested Four Years

AND PROVED TO BE

Of Great Commercial Value

If you plant Beacon, your help will have to hustle or put in extra time picking flowers

Commencing to bloom early in the fall, it gives a profusion of flowers for Christmas (when scarlet is in demand at remunerative prices) and CONTINUES THROUGHOUT THE WINTER MONTHS. It may not score so high on the exhibition table as some, but WILL FIGURE UP ON THE RIGHT SIDE OF YOUR LEDGER in a manner highly satisfactory.

The blooms, under ordinary culture, average 2¾ to 3 inches in diameter, the guard petals are broad, well arranged and of good substance, the center loosely arranged and not too full. Color scarlet with a dash of orange, which lightens up the flower, especially during dull, dark weather, making it very brilliant and attractive. The stem is long, stiff and wiry. Calyx long and seldom bursts (less than four per cent last winter.) It propagates easily. The plant is a vigorous, healthy grower, of ideal habit, and a most profuse bloomer. A night temperature of 50 to 52 degrees suits it admirably.

splendid screen and is of the easiest culture and stands trimming well.

Rose hedges are also in great favor at present and many thousands of Agrippina, Hermosa, Cecil Brunner, Gloire Lyonnaise and Duchess de Brabant will be planted this season. These are really the best roses for this purpose, as they need no support, have plenty of foliage, are constant bloomers and stand trimming well. The Agrippina is by far the most showy rose to use for this purpose, and a hedge of it is one of the most beautiful objects imaginable.

Both dwarf and tree box are in favor again and are being largely used for low hedges and borders. They have an old-fashioned air about them, but there is nothing that will take their places when a low effect is desired. G.

Current Comment.

At present writing the weather conditions are more favorable than at any time so far this year. Consequently stock is more plentiful and with the brighter days the quality will soon be what it should have been all the season. Carnations and bulb stock can be had in quantity. Roses, however, are scarce; the same applies to home-grown violets.

At the last meeting of the Florists' Association, held in A. Wiegand & Son's store, it was decided to hold a spring show some time in April. A committee will be appointed and details arranged at the March meeting.

Several of the craft and their families are experiencing a touch of the grip, a visitation that can be dispensed with.

Mr. Hasselman is at present on an extended tour of the west and Pacific slope. He is expected home about the middle of March.

Frank Hasselman had fine success at the poultry show, where he captured several prizes in the different classes for pigeons.

The March meeting of the Florists' Association will be held March 5 at Baur & Smith's greenhouses. S.

SPRINGFIELD, OHIO.

The Springfield Florists' Club met February 11, when a paper by O. F. Serviss, assistant postmaster, was read on "Postal Rules," a matter in which florists doing a mail order business are vitally interested. The meeting was held at the office of John Good, of the Good & Reese Co.

A number of local florists went to Urbana February 6 to attend a banquet given by Roger Murphy and sons at their Urbana greenhouses. Those in the party were John M. Good, Ipha Jackson, George H. Mellen, Edward Kriegbaum, Joseph Campbell, H. C. Reeser, Charles Schmidt, Charles Niuffer, Ward Welsh and Lou Campbell.

ARDMORE, I. T.—G. A. Drain says the trade of local florists is injured by the competition of mail-order houses, whose catalogues flood the county.

ATCHISON, KAN.—E. S. Snell reports that the long spell of cloudy weather has nearly ruined his lettuce crop. Thrips, which he says are bad in cloudy weather, have appeared on the lettuce.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. No discount. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

The fore part of last week it was still very cold, but Wednesday the mercury started to work upward and a change in trade was noticed. Violets and bulb stock were then in demand. Thursday made up for all shortcomings, for every retailer in St. Paul had about all the funeral work he could conveniently turn out for the funeral of Postmaster Flower. It is closely estimated that there was between $1,000 and $1,500 worth of flowers used for the occasion. The market was affected to some extent and stock was quite scarce two succeeding days. Prices have kept up nicely. The home supply of carnations has fallen short of the demand and outside markets are supplying us. Violets are shipped here in large numbers, for the demand is good.

St. Paul.

Colberg & Lemke are displaying some nice Valentine's baskets. Business on that day every year, they say, shows up in good shape.

L. L. May & Co. are putting up some unique window displays, using baskets of flowers. A large crescent wreath of magnolia leaves draped with green chiffon attracts attention. They turned out some handsome arrangements for Postmaster Flower's funeral.

Holm & Olson report a big trade and supplied a great many sprays for the postmaster's funeral. They have had some fair decorations.

Charles F. Vogt furnished a large standing wreath sent by the mailing department of the post-office and which was highly commented on.

One of the most peculiar pieces sent to the postmaster's funeral was a crown of an azalea, evidently in full bloom when it left the florist's, but the blooms had been shaken off in delivery. In the center of the plant were perhaps 300 violets and the stock of the plant tied with a satin ribbon to match. It was no doubt the choice of the customer, but unquestionably an odd piece.

Minneapolis.

Oscar Amundson, of Amundson & Kerschner, buried his father February 7. Ashton Kerschner visited St. Paul and found the trade all busy.

James Soudan, of the Wm. Donaldson Co., says business is fine and is well pleased with the appearance of his Easter stock.

The Whitted Floral Co. reports a satisfactory business and sent a large piece to St. Paul for the postmaster's funeral, made of American Beauties and violets.

The New York Floral Co. keep good window displays. They have from 500 to 1,000 carnations in them at all times, and as they have a prominent location, dispose of large numbers daily.

CINCINNATI.

The Market.

After a long and weary wait we are having what we ought to have had long ago; that is, fine, bright winter weather. After the long period of cloudy weather the plants were in such a condition that the sun caused them to wilt right down, and so it had a bad effect for a while, but they rapidly recovered and now a marked improvement can be seen, especially in the carnations, which will soon be blooming in fine style. It will be some time before the roses will be doing what they ought to do. They bloomed so strong in the late fall and early winter that it is only reasonable for them to have a rest now.

The condition of the market is much the same as last reported. The shortage is still with us, but toward the end of last week the demand decreased quite a good deal. The demand for bulbous flowers has been fine, owing to the scarcity of other stock, and the price obtained for them has been satisfactory. George & Allan, who grow large quantities of bulbous stock, have been reaping a harvest. Some fine Dutch hyacinths are coming in and they sell well at $4 to $6. They are in all colors.

Society Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Florists' Society, which was called for February 9, proved to be a disappointment, as not enough members responded to make a quorum until so late that a meeting was not held.

There is plenty of enthusiasm for having a good big flower show in this city next autumn. Every one seems to think that this city is ripe for such a show. They think that there would be no trouble to get the kind of stock to make the show. But when you begin to talk of raising the money to back up the show, there is nothing doing. The financial part of a flower show is where the trouble comes in. So, from the present outlook, the chances of there being a flower show in this city next autumn are slim. No one is willing to go ahead without the backing and the chances of getting that are small. C. J. Ohmer.

WASHINGTON.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Washington Florists' Club took place Tuesday evening, February 5, at Gude's hall, 1214 F street. The meeting was of unusual importance, embracing features of much interest.

A representative of Dingee & Conard gave a lecture on "Rose Culture." Quite a fine display of roses and new carnations was on exhibition. A vase of Golden Gate roses, grown by F. H. Kramer, was awarded a first-class cultural certificate. He also showed his Queen Beatrice, not yet disseminated, but which had previously been favorably passed upon by the awards committee. W. S. Clark showed his fine new seedling rose, Columbia, though not in sufficient quantity to be acted upon, and it will be shown later. Among the new carnations shown by F. R. Pierson were vases of Winsor and White Enchantress, both exhibited for the second time. H. Weber & Sons Co., of Oakland, Md., showed for the first time a new seedling of Prosperity type, named Toreador, which was awarded ninety-one points. Mabelle, a pink seedling from the same grower, was favorably passed upon.

Nominations for the annual election of officers resulted as follows: President, Peter Bisset; vice-president, Z. D. Blackistone; secretary, Charles McCauley; treasurer, William F. Gude and W. H. Ernest; board of directors, G. C. Shaffer, F. H. Kramer, W. S. Clark, E. C. Mayberry and John Robertson.

Much interest was manifested in the meeting of the American Rose Society, to be held here March 13 to 15. The annual banquet will be given on the evening of March 14, at The Arlington hotel, to which members of the Rose Society will be invited.

WASHINGTON.

Club Meeting.

The regular monthly meeting of the Washington Florists' Club took place Tuesday evening, February 5, at Gude's hall, 1214 F street. The meeting was of unusual importance, embracing features of much interest.

A representative of Dingee & Conard gave a lecture on "Rose Culture." Quite a fine display of roses and new carnations was on exhibition. A vase of Golden Gate roses, grown by F. H. Kramer, was awarded a first-class cultural certificate. He also showed his Queen Beatrice, not yet disseminated, but which had previously been favorably passed upon by the awards committee. W. S. Clark showed his fine new seedling rose, Columbia, though not in sufficient quantity to be acted upon, and it will be shown later. Among the new carnations shown by F. R. Pierson were vases of Winsor and White Enchantress, both exhibited for the second time. H. Weber & Sons Co., of Oakland, Md., showed for the first time a new seedling of Prosperity type, named Toreador, which was awarded ninety-one points. Mabelle, a pink seedling from the same grower, was favorably passed upon.

Nominations for the annual election of officers resulted as follows: President, Peter Bisset; vice-president, Z. D. Blackistone; secretary, Charles McCauley; treasurer, William F. Gude and W. H. Ernest; board of directors, G. C. Shaffer, F. H. Kramer, W. S. Clark, E. C. Mayberry and John Robertson.

Much interest was manifested in the meeting of the American Rose Society, to be held here March 13 to 15. The annual banquet will be given on the evening of March 14, at The Arlington hotel, to which members of the Rose Society will be invited.

GRAND RAPIDS.

With several bright days lately, flowers have opened wonderfully, but there is still a scarcity that will take some time to catch up. Funerals have been numerous, there having been fifty deaths here in the last eight days. White flowers of all kinds, especially shorts for funeral work, have been in great demand and the market is kept pretty clear.

The Florists' Club met Thursday, January 31, and elected officers and made arrangements to meet in the Board of Trade rooms every first and third Monday of each month. Henry Smith was elected president and William Freling secretary. The committees on bylaws and prizes made their reports, which for the most part were accepted, and from the present outlook Grand Rapids will again be on the map with a large and flourishing florists' club.

G. F. Crabb, of the Crabb & Hunter Floral Co., has been sick with pneumonia for the last ten days, but has passed the critical point and will be around again in a couple of weeks.

A number of Holland bulb men were in town this week, but report few orders, as the territory had been pretty well canvassed early in the year. A. F. C.

PAPER WHITE NARCISSI.

The first week in December I planted some Paper Whites in flats and placed them outside, as usual. On examining them today I found that they had made not more than two inches of roots, many of which were rotted at the ends. They seemed to have taken hold of the soil only a little. The tops were one-half inch to one inch long. The soil was moist enough. Now I wish to ask, would it be wise to attempt to force these for Easter? C. E.

The mistake made was in placing these narcissi outdoors at all. Had they been placed under a bench in the greenhouse and darkened somewhat, or in a cellar, they would have been all right. Paper Whites are more delicate than the trumpet section of the narcissus family and the fact that few roots were made and that these were rotting would indicate that they have been too cold.

It will hardly pay to attempt to force bulbs with practically no roots. Another season, after boxing place under a bench or in some place with a minimum temperature of 45 to 50 degrees and they will be found to do well. The outdoor treatment, especially as late as December, will not do for these French bulbs. C. W.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

W. H. Head, superintendent of the Plant estate at New London, Conn., has kept a force of men and teams busy removing large specimen trees from Norwich, twenty miles distant. Each tree requires a team of eight horses to draw it. At the time of my visit a splendid purple beech, measuring fifty feet in height and three feet in diameter, was being planted.

E. W. Clark, of New London, says he cannot remember when roses were so scarce and poor as they have been of late. Carnations are fair. Business is brisk. A big job at the opening of a handsome Elks' room called for all the roses he could pick up.

Felix G. Mense, of Glen Cove, N. Y., met with a serious accident when returning from the New York Florists' Club with the specimen plant of a dwarf and compact form of Salvia splendens, which makes a fine pot plant and can be brought into bloom at Christmas. With a certificate of merit in his pocket, Mr. Mense was alighting from the train, which jolted, causing him to let the plant fall, breaking the bones of two toes of his right foot, which will make him a cripple for some time.

Ira G. Marvin has built a handsome store adjoining the opera house, at Wilkes Barre, Pa. Being forced to vacate his old stand he had an opportunity to build and has a thoroughly up-to-date place. Eldridge & Co., who formerly occupied this location, moved into a convenient place on Main street.

W. L. Carr, at Kingston, Pa., is preparing a big line of bedding stock, which is a feature with him.

George R. Clark & Co., of Scranton, Pa., do as big business as ever at their store, buying all stock from out of town. For years they have had the seed trade of the town and, being a poultry fancier, Mr. Clark has added a line of poultry supplies.

Marvin & Muir, also of Scranton, report a busy season for funeral work, a specialty with them.

S. J. Reuter, of Westerly, R. I., is just getting over a severe attack of the grip which seized him while at Toronto, attending the convention, hastening his return before he had finished his round of calls. He was much impressed with the Dale and Dunlop plants and intended paying Mr. Gammage a visit, expecting to see a representative range of plant houses. Mr. Reuter says the trip more than repaid him. He met there Alexander Miller, formerly of the Rhode Island Greenhouses and now manager of the Green Floral Co., Dallas, Tex. He is full of praise of the sunny south and predicts a great future for the business there. W. M.

Greenhouse Heating.

TO HEAT SIX HOUSES.

I have five greenhouses side by side, as follows: One 14x72 and ten feet to the ridge; one 14x68 and five feet high; one 14x72 and five feet high; one 14x54 and five feet high, and one 24x80 and ten feet to the ridge. I intend to build another along the ends of these, about 16x130 and ten feet to the ridge. Each of the five houses has a separate heating system. I would like to know what horse-power boiler would be required to heat all six houses in New York climate. There would be about 9,000 feet of glass. No glass in the sides or ends. I have four houses piped with 4-inch, the other with 1½-inch and 2-inch. Will that make any difference in the working of the new system? What size of flows and returns will I need in the long house, as this will be the feeder for the others? I plan to locate the boiler at one end of the new, long house and hence at one corner of the range.

D. C. H.

A horizontal tubular boiler rated at forty horse-power will have sufficient capacity to carry the plant in question if it can be located so that the maximum length of the longest flow pipe does not exceed 100 or 125 feet. When you exceed these lengths it frequently becomes necessary to install circulating pumps. I would not attempt to heat this plant by hot water on a gravity system with the boiler located as proposed. It will be more difficult to govern the rate of the circulation in the different houses when piped with various sizes of pipe than when all are treated alike. You are likely to meet many discouragements in attempting to remodel this range on a strictly hot water basis. If it will not entail too much loss, dispense with the 4-inch pipe, replace it by 1½-inch and place the boiler in the middle of the proposed cover house and run a combination system, hot water in mild weather and steam in cold weather.

L. C. C.

FOUR-INCH PIPE.

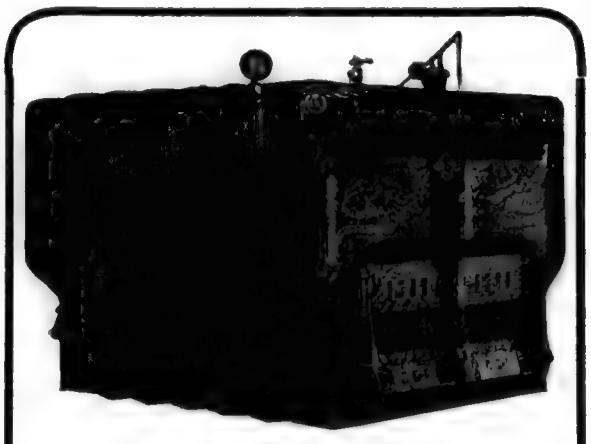
We propose to erect an east and west house 30x200 and thirteen feet to the ridge, for pot plants and cut flowers. Which would be the best system of piping, sixteen runs of pipe to 100 feet of house? We intend to put a glass partition across the center of the house and have the west 100 feet for a cool house and the east end for a warm house. We intend to put the same amount of pipe in each part, but have the west house valved so we can run it cool when necessary.

The boiler-room and potting-shed will be placed on the north side at the center of the house, so we can run pipe 100 feet each way. The two outside benches will be three feet wide, the three center benches five feet four inches wide and the walks twenty inches wide. Under each side bench will be two 4-inch flows and three 4-inch returns; the next two outside middle benches, each one 4-inch flow and two 4-inch returns, and no pipe under the center bench.

Another system would be to use 3½-inch pipes for returns, instead of 4-inch, with the same number of runs.

How many pipes should be valved to keep the cool house at a temperature of 40 degrees? The warm house we wish to run from 60 to 70 degrees in Wisconsin climate. The coal cellar will be 12x30, running the same as the greenhouse, on the north side. We propose to run the boiler back under the greenhouse as far as we can, so as to have room to run the smoke pipe from the boiler into the chimney in the coal cellar. The boiler will be north and south and feed from the north. This will give us more room to clean the flues and more coal room; and in running the pipes those on the east side of the boiler can furnish the east house and those on the west side the west house. We will have the Kroeschell boiler No. 12. We wish to build another house 30x200 on to this on the south side in a year or two. Would the pipes running straight ahead to furnish the next house interfere with each other?

W. T.



I am greatly interested in the plan you propose for heating your greenhouse. If I count correctly you are planning to use sixteen 4-inch pipes to heat these houses, equal to 1,600 lineal feet of 4-inch pipe. With water at 180 degrees you should be able to maintain 60 to 70 degrees of temperature in these houses, with twelve runs of 4-inch pipe. But why use 4-inch pipe? Twenty runs of 2-inch pipe will give you a little more radiation than the twelve runs of 4-inch, at about two-thirds of the cost and be cheaper to install and just as satisfactory if the expansion tank is placed twelve to fifteen feet above the boiler. The cooler house, if to be piped as a cool house, can be run on thirteen runs of 2-inch pipe or eight runs of 4-inch. If it is to have maximum piping, same as the other, then arrange valves so as to permit of reducing the number of service pipes to the numbers specified. If 2-inch pipe is used a 2-inch riser with three 2-inch returns can be placed under each bench. If 4-inch pipe is used it may be distributed as follows: A flow and two returns under each outside bench and a loop, i. e., a flow and return under each of the other benches, making twelve runs of pipe in all for the house.

If you arrange the boiler as suggested, see that it is properly enclosed, so as to cut off connection with the plant houses. Such an arrangement is seldom advisable, because of the danger of gas from the boiler-room getting in the houses. It is best to have the boiler-room completely cut off from the houses.

PIPING FOR STEAM.

We have seven houses 18x175 to 20x175, side by side. The one system furnishes steam heat for the seven houses, store and residence. The boilers are at one corner of the block of houses. We figured on running the main flow overhead along the ends of the houses and the main return below; the flows to be overhead and returns under the benches. Our flows and returns are all 2-inch pipe. How many 2-inch returns will a 2-inch flow carry? Should check-valves be put in all returns before they enter the main return and should there be one or two valves on these lines? We thought of having the highest point of the main flow at the farther end slanting toward the boiler, with the bleeder at the end connecting with the return. What size should the main flow be on leaving the boiler; also the return upon entering the boiler? We have two forty-two horse-power tubular boilers set same height. Is it better to work the boilers together or separately? W. & S.

Each of your houses should be provided with a 3-inch riser and, if 2-inch pipe is used for returns, at least nine should be installed to insure 60 degrees in cold weather. The yoke for the boilers and the main flow should be 6-inch pipe. Each boiler should be tapped with a 4-inch outlet. The 6-inch flow should cover the ends of the first four houses; the remaining three can be carried by a 4-inch flow. The main return, if it has a good fall and is well above the water line in the boilers, need be only 2-inch. If it is below the water line of the boilers and each return from the houses is sealed by it, it had better be 4-inch. The highest point in the main flow should be immediately over the boilers if possible. All water of condensation should be carried with the flow of the steam instead of against it, as would be the case with the main flow sloping towards the boiler with the high point at the far end. Install the bleeder with swing joints at the end of the riser and the return, at which point these two pipes should be closer together than at any other point. Put swing check-valves on the return of each house before it enters the main return, and a globe valve in addition. Checks are not to be depended upon to hold steam; they usually work well enough when there is water in the returns, but globe or gate valves should be installed in both flow and return to each house to insure complete control.

NEWPORT, R. I.

Current Comment.

The only redeeming feature of the weather we have experienced lately was that which enabled a crop of good ice to be harvested; otherwise it has been depressing in the extreme. Florists have had little business of late to help to keep them warm and in good humor, and the difficulty in getting good material for the little business there was did not mend matters either.

In spite of the storm we were visited last week by a number of gentlemen representing large seed houses and allied concerns, among whom were: Thomas Grey, Boston; J. R. Clarke, Roxbury, Mass.; Herman Leips, New York, and Mr. Folger, representing the Bonnie Brae nurseries, New Rochelle, New York.

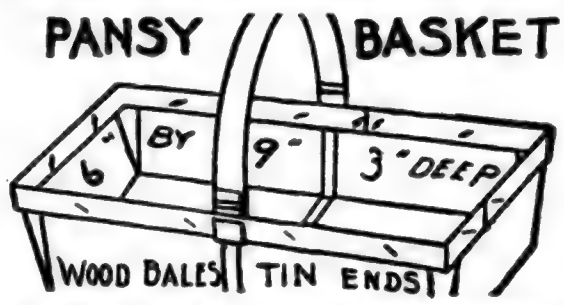
John H. Cox, New England representative of the F. R. Pierson Co., has advised his friends, on the eve of his departure for England, that he goes there to push the sale of American carnations, and particularly the sale of Winsor blooms, of which, as well as others, he intends to exhibit at the Temple show in London and at shows in other cities in England, Scotland, Ireland and the continent of Europe.

John S. Hay, representing H. A. Dreer Co., was here a week ago, but it happened that the firm's catalogue, which is, by the way, unusually comprehensive, had not got into the hands of customers at the time of his arrival. Mr. Hay deemed it the best policy to go into Massachusetts and make a return visit here, when he believes he will be aided by the attractions of the catalogue.

The extraordinary popularity of dahlias during the last year or two has induced several enthusiasts to embark in their cultivation, who had before been engaged in business for which their early training would seem to better qualify them; but time only will tell whether or not they made a mistake.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Jurgens have gone to Europe, where they will remain two months or more. In the absence of Mr. Jurgens the business, which is the most extensive of its kind in these parts, will be under the management of his son.

Stewart Ritchie is one of the very few who do not grumble about the effect the bad weather has on carnations.



The town of Middletown, which adjoins Newport, is in some ways more desirable for summer residences than Newport is, because large tracts of land are available near the water. This fact is slowly becoming recognized and several beautiful residences have recently been built there and others are in contemplation.

Chrysanthemum

By Arthur Herrington

Formerly president Chrysanthemum Society of America.

The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. Its scope and character may be gleaned from the list of contents, which comprises chapters on composts; planting; benches, boxes or pots; general cultural details; crown and terminal buds; feeding, its object and application; care of the buds; exhibition and judging; specimen plants, plants in pots; raising from seed and hybridizing; sports; hardy chrysanthemums; chrysanthemums for south and west; insect pests and diseases; classification and selection of varieties for special purposes; history of the chrysanthemum, etc. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. Price 50c postpaid.

Costs and Competition

We can help you both ways—first, with a house, and equipment that is not only up-to-date, but up to stay up; a layout that meets in the handiest, most economical way, just your needs. You must always keep in mind that we thoroughly understand the right laying out of your house to give the greatest returns from least time and labor expended by your help. We are not only greenhouse builders, but economy engineers—we help you meet competition—and you'll have pleasant dealing. Write us.

You want light—and lots of it—want it straight from old Sol in all its strength-giving power. U-Bar greenhouses are the best greenhouses built because there is no house as light. No form of construction so successfully employs 24-inch glass between bars. This means just one-third the bars, one-third less shade. But it's also a case of just half the number of our posts—just half the number of post holes to dig—just half the time and bother of lining up—just half the amount of paint—just half the amount of shade, and you have a proposition that will practically last forever.

RAWSON'S SUPERB... DAHLIAS

Are Known From MAINE to CALIFORNIA

We have a special Dahlia farm in Connecticut for the purpose of growing bulbs. This farm is under the supervision of a grower, who has had experience with this flower for the last 25 years. We guarantee our bulbs to be true to name and are willing to replace same if they are found otherwise. We are offering this year nearly 250 varieties of Cactus Dahlias alone, not mentioning the other classes. We extend a cordial invitation to every florist in the country during the Summer and Fall to visit our occupying two acres, right in the heart of the old historic town of Marblehead, Mass., where we grow fully 1000 varieties of Dahlias for exhibition purposes only. Every novelty of account either European or American may be seen.

We do not Grow Dahlias for Quantity but for Quality

The demand for Dahlias as cut flowers has been steadily on the increase and some of the choicer varieties of Cactus Dahlias are prized as highly as any of the choicest varieties of Roses.

Our complete list of varieties with illustrations and descriptions covers 12 pages in a catalogue, which every florist should possess. It represents the highest art of "American Catalogue Printing," as it is completely new from page 1 to 144.

We offer this season seven new American seedlings of Dahlias, which created a sensation wherever shown last Fall and which the FLORISTS' REVIEW has considered important enough to mention at length in this issue.

Now that the "New England Dahlia Society" is an active and live society, the future of the Dahlia is established and every florist in the country can add considerably to his income by devoting a quarter of an acre or more to the cultivation of this profitable flower.

Do not wait till the growing season is here but let us book your order now thus assuring you no disappointment.

BOMBAYREED JARDINIERES

Are What The Florists Are Using Nowadays!

No. 7—Japanese.

WHY?

Because they wear. They stand exposure to sunlight and moisture.

They are not made of grass or split willow, but from the genuine solid bamboo reeds, imported direct from India for our own use, which makes them admirable for decorating and hard usage.

The BOMBAYREED JARDINIERES are quick sellers, too, because they are extensively advertised in the popular magazines. We create a big demand.

They are by far the most artistic and serviceable jardinieres on the market today.

We offer liberal trade discounts and solicit your inquiry as to our attractive freight allowances. All our jardinieres are made in nine styles and in all colors. Sizes from four inches up. Flexible pot covers in extra large sizes. Our prices are low and inviting.

We will send you by express prepaid an eight-inch sample in any style or color. When you get it try their lasting qualities, and order, if you are satisfied.

Don't forget that our Foliage Green colors have made the hit.

ILLINOIS STATE FLORISTS' ASSOCIATION

A Successful Meeting.

The second annual convention of the Illinois State Florists' Association convened at Bloomington, Tuesday, February 19. The attendance was several times that of the first convention at Peoria a year ago, and the trade exhibit was much larger and more diversified. The state society seems to have started upon a long and prosperous career.

The address of welcome was delivered by H. H. Green and responded to by W. N. Rudd. President J. F. Ammann delivered an address outlining the work already performed by the society and directing attention to the many opportunities for usefulness which lie in its path. Secretary Hasselbring reported an excellent membership list, covering all sections of the state.

Papers were read as follows: "The Florists and the Experiment Station," A. C. Beal, Champaign; "Carnations at the Toronto Show," W. N. Rudd, Mt. Greenwood; "The Effect of Shade on Plants," H. Hasselbring, Chicago; "The Development of Floriculture in Illinois," Prof. J. C. Blair, Champaign.

Officers Elected.

The following officers were elected: President, Albert T. Hey, Springfield; vice-presidents, J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville; Wilbur Gullett, Lincoln; Charles Loveridge, Peoria; William Heinl, Jacksonville; August Poehlmann, Morton Grove; H. Hasselbring, Chicago; A. S. Halstead, Belleville; secretary, A. C. Beal, Champaign; treasurer, George A. Kuhl, Pekin.

Springfield was selected as the place of meeting in 1908.

Resolutions were adopted expressive of the interest the society takes in the legislation now pending looking to the establishing of greenhouses for experimental purposes at the State University and the great value such an institution will be to the trade in the study of plant-growers' problems beyond the resources of the individual.

The Banquet.

The Bloomington Florists' Club had made large preparations for the entertainment of the state association and tendered the visitors a banquet on the evening of February 19, at which an excellent menu was served.

Following the discussion of viands, W. N. Rudd was introduced as toastmaster. The toasts and those who responded were as follows: "The State Society and Its Object," Prof. A. C. Beal; "Our Hoosier Neighbors," J. D. Carmody; "The S. A. F. and Florists' Clubs," P. J. Hauswirth; "The Sunny Side of the Florists' Business," W. J. Gullett; "Why Isn't a Florist as Good as Any Other Man?" H. Hasselbring.

Prof. C. J. Blair spoke for the state college of agriculture and outlined what is hoped to do in the way of solving floricultural problems in the event of the state legislature making the anticipated appropriation for greenhouses in which to conduct the work. J. F. Ammann spoke for the state society, and George Asmus, of Chicago, discussed the benefits which accrued from our periodical exhibitions. Several others spoke briefly.

The Trade Exhibit.

The trade exhibition was large and included a wide variety of subjects. Quality was fine and judged purely as a flower show it was the best ever seen in a provincial city in Illinois. The judges were I. L. Pillsbury, P. J. Hauswirth and C. Loveridge. Their report follows:

We find the display in general very good and we wish to commend all the exhibitors to your society. We wish to make special mention of the following:

Aristocrat, White Perfection, and Red Riding Hood, by the Chicago Carnation Co., all of which were very fine; red seedling No. 20, by Bassett & Washburn, good size and color; Killarney and Morton Grove roses, the latter a sport of Mme. Chatenay, by Poehlmann Bros. Co., both of fine color and showed well; Gov. Deneen carnation, a royal purple of large size, by A. C. Brown; Whitmani ferns, splendidly grown specimens, Geo. A. Kuhl.

And we wish to mention the following:

Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, six vases of carnations, two of Aristocrat, Red Riding Hood, White Perfection, Enchantress and Melody.

Bassett & Washburn, Chicago, two vases of red seedling No. 20.

W. H. Gullett & Sons, Lincoln, two vases, one of Brides and one of Bridesmaids, of very high quality; three vases of carnations.

Poehlmann Bros. Co., Chicago, vases of Richmond, Killarney, Bride, Bridesmaid, Morton Grove and Uncle John, all very good.

Peter Reinberg, Chicago, vases of Richmond, Bride, Bridesmaid and Uncle John, a good display.

Swan Peterson, Gibson City, a fine vase of Nelson Fisher, vase of white seedling, No. 127, and dark crimson No. 103.

John E. Haines, Bethlehem, Pa., vases of Imperial and Pink Imperial; did not show to good advantage as they arrived in bad shape.

Brant & Noe Floral Co., Chicago, five vases of carnations.

Henry Baer, Peoria, vases of Lady Bountiful, Robt. Craig, Enchantress, Mrs. Patten, vase of mignonette, all of which showed to good advantage.

W. C. Hill Floral Co., Streator, a vase of Melody.

Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, Ind., vase of May, a light pink which showed well.

W. N. Rike, LeRoy, a vase of Enchantress.

A. C. Brown, Springfield, vases of Governor Deneen, seedling pink No. 202, Lawson, Nelson Fisher, and three vases of mixed seedlings.

J. W. Shrader, Mattoon, vases of Enchantress and Rose-pink Enchantress.

Geo. A. Kuhl, Pekin, a display of well grown plants, including cyclamens, Primula Obconica, Whitmani, Boston and other ferns and begonias, all of which showed good cultivation.

Vaughan's Seed Store, Chicago, a general line of bulbs, Whitmani ferns, H. P. roses, fern balls, dracænas, etc.

Davis Bros., Morrison, Whitmani fern.

A. L. Randall Co., Chicago, a fine and large display of florists' supplies, including baskets, chiffons, ribbons, imported novelties in vases and baskets, boxes, wheat sheaves, etc.

E. F. Winterson Co., Chicago, display of florists' supplies.

Bombayreed Manufacturing Co., Columbia, S. C., display bombayreed jardiniers.

Advance Co., Richmond, Ind., ventilating apparatus for greenhouses.

A. Dietsch Co., Chicago, gutters and gutter supports with iron posts.

Ionia Pottery Co., Ionia, Mich., flower pots, lawn vases, hanging baskets, etc.

Geo. Keller & Son, Chicago, flower pots, fern pans, hanging baskets.

G. M. Garland Co., Des Plaines, iron gutters for greenhouses.

BATAVIA, ILL.—The Powell Co. has acquired land west of town and will erect three greenhouses 27x90.

DAYTON, O.—The Florists' Club is urging the city officials to establish more city parks.

CROWN POINT, IND.—August Dressel, of the Crown Point Floral Co., has begun the erection of two houses, each 40x150.

First Annual Convention.

The first annual convention of the Society of Southern Florists was held at New Orleans February 14 to 16 and was a most pronounced success so far as the interesting nature of the proceedings was concerned, but in point of attendance and extent of trade display did not come up to the expectations of the promoters. President R. C. Berckmans was prevented from being present and the meetings were presided over by C. W. Eichling, of New Orleans, vice-president of the society, who acquitted himself most creditably. The report of the secretary showed a membership of fifty-six and the treasurer's report showed a balance of $104.90.

Essays were read as follows: "Chrysanthemum Growing in the South," F. P. Davis, Mobile, Ala.; "Profitable Orchids for the Florist," J. A. Newsham, New Orleans; "Packing, Shipping and Express Rates," C. W. Eichling, New Orleans; "Roses Under Glass in the South," R. Lockerbie, New Orleans; "What the South Can Grow for Northern Markets," B. M. Wichers, Gretna, La.; "Laws and Regulations Controlling Spread of Insects and Plant Diseases," A. A. Rosenfeld; "Experience with Carnations in Alabama," W. B. Patterson, Jr., Montgomery, Ala.; "Gardening in the Public Schools," Prof. Caldwell, Nachitoches, La.

The presentation of each paper was followed by interesting discussion, in each the New Orleans craft participated and from which many valuable points of personal experience were extracted. Among those who figured in the debates were J. A. Newsham, R. Lockerbie, C. W. Eichling, Joseph Steckler, P. Abele, E. Baker, A. Alost, W. B. Patterson, Jr., M. M. de Lapouyade, P. A. Chopin, B. M. Wichers, Harry Papworth, C. R. Panter, W. L. Kroeschell and others. It was the consensus of opinion that none of our trade organizations has ever had a more valuable set of papers, nor has it ever had more interesting and instructive discussions.

The officers elected were as follows: President, J. A. Newsham, New Orleans; vice-president, F. P. Davis, Mobile, Ala.; second vice-president, W. B. Patterson, Montgomery, Ala.; treasurer, Joseph Steckler, New Orleans; secretary, Paul Abele, New Orleans; executive committee, E. H. R. Green, Dallas, Tex.; Edw. Baker, C. R. Panter and R. Lockerbie, New Orleans.

The selection of the place of next meeting was left in the hands of the executive committee.

A part of the closing session was devoted to a discussion as to how greater interest could be aroused among the members outside of New Orleans. It was the general opinion that an excellent start has been made in the first year of the society's existence and that the prospect is good for a much better attendance at the second annual meeting.

Among those present from out of town were W. L. Kroeschell, of Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago; George O. Stoddard, of Caldwell, the Woodsman Decorating Co., Evergreen Ala.; C. D. Otis, Lake Charles, La.; M. J. Galvin, Uniontown, Pa.; W. B. Patterson, Jr., Montgomery, Ala.

The trade exhibition was largely confined to the displays of stock by New Orleans growers, but many of these were of much interest. M. Cook & Son made a fine display of sweet olive raised from layers, exhibiting plants all the way from 4-inch pots to specimens six feet tall. B. M. Wichers, Gretna, La., had a fine display of ferns of the nephrolepis varieties. C. W. Eichling staged plants of Adiantum hybridum and A. magnificum. J. A. Newsham had two groups of decorative plants, including a pair of Cocos Australis valued at $150. He also had fine azaleas and rhododendrons. Abele Bros. staged a large quantity of flowering plants. Chas. Eble showed good stock of palms and ferns. The J. Steckler Seed Co. had a splendid display of vegetables, grown from their seeds. S. Nosacka & Son, New Orleans, showed wire frames. The Avenue Floral Co. had an exhibit of Target brand scale destroyer. Kroeschell Bros. Co., Chicago, had one of its boilers on exhibition. The Paducah Pottery Co., Paducah, Ky., exhibited a general line of its wares.

Saturday evening seventy members of the New Orleans Horticultural Society and guests sat at a banquet at Fabacher's restaurant. An excellent menu was partaken of, after which President Otto Abele introduced C. R. Panter as toastmaster. He filled the post most acceptably. J. C. Waldo, assistant district attorney, was the speaker of the evening, and a number of those in the trade, including the visitors, were called on for remarks. The banquet was one of the most successful features of the convention.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Chinese Primroses.

Nicely bloomed plants of Chinese primroses sell well at Christmas. It may seem a long cry ahead to that festival, but if nice plants in 5-inch or 6-inch pots are desired the seed should be sown not later than the middle of March. Of course, flowering plants may be secured from later sowings, but the seed will germinate better now, before the sun has gained too much power. It never pays to purchase cheap mixtures of any of the choice greenhouse flowering plants. Buy the best strain procurable and, if you have critical customers, get it in separate colors. For a Christmas color nothing is better than Crimson King, introduced some years ago by Sutton, the well-known English seed house. Soft pink, deep pink, pure white and blue are all good selling colors. The Duchess has jumped into great favor. It has a pure white flower of large size, with a zone of rosy carmine surrounding a clear yellow eye.

The newer Primula stellata, commonly known as star primroses, have been much improved the last two or three years. The flowers are smaller than in the case of P. Sinensis, but are freely produced, on long stems thrown well above the foliage. For decorative effect in rooms or for table centerpieces these are much superior to the older type. These are now procurable in about as many shades of color as the older type, but the varieties White Queen Star and Pink Star make the best plants. The blues and scarlets do not grow so vigorously.

In sowing primulas, pans or flats should be used, well drained, some coarse moss over the drainage, followed by finely sifted soil composed of two-thirds leaf-mold, one-third loam and a good dash of sand and powdered charcoal. Water the pans or flats after leveling them, drop the seeds evenly over the surface, sift a little compost over them, just enough to cover the seeds; water lightly, then cover with sheets of glass and lay paper over that until germination occurs, when they should be gradually inured to air and light. In a moist house with a night temperature of 60 degrees the seeds will germinate in from two to three weeks.

Cinerarias.

Cinerarias love a cool house, 45 degrees at night being high enough. They are now growing rapidly and if any need a shift ere flowering let them have it right away. A compost of two-thirds turfy loam, one-third dried cow manure and a little fine bone may be used for this final potting. Green aphis is partial to them and tobacco stems should be spread among them once a fortnight. Similar treatment will suit calceolarias. A spraying overhead early in the afternoon will be found beneficial.

Bulbous Stock.

We are now getting more sunshine and bulbous stock comes on much more rapidly. It is yet too early to bring in narcissi and tulips for Easter. From March 5 to 10, with ordinary winter conditions, should be sufficiently early. It will now be unnecessary to place the flats and pans in dark places to draw up the stems, as they will have made a good growth by this time and the extra sun heat will help to lengthen them. It will be well to allow such narcissi as Horsfieldii, Emperor, Sir Watkin and any of the Leedsi type a few days longer than such well-known forcing kinds as Golden Spur, Trumpet Major and double Von Sion. The early form of pheasant's eye, N. poeticus ornatus, is a most useful Easter flower and should be brought in right away, as it comes on rather more slowly. Do not subject any of these bulbs to a higher temperature than 50 to 52 degrees at night and they will be in ample time.

Such popular double tulips as Murillo, Rex Rubrorum, La Candeur and Tournesol will be found to need a little longer time for development than La Reine, Yellow Prince, Keizerskroon, the Pottebakker's, Cottage Maid and other singles. Hyacinths should be coming along within three weeks without undue forcing. It is always difficult to tell precisely the time needed to get these things in season. If March should be cold and rather sunless they will take the full time named. If warm and bright, they may need retarding in a cold house for a few days. Better to be a little too early, however, than too late and try hard forcing at the last.

Seed Sowing.

It will now be necessary to sow quite a number of seeds. The proper compost for these has been so many times described that it seems needless to say more about it. Briefly told, leaf-mold with a little loam and sand is the best medium for seed sowing. Fresh manure and heavy loams should not be used. See that all flats, pots or pans are well drained with broken pots or coarse ashes. Always finely screen the soil on which the seed is to be sown and press with a piece of light board to make level. For pots or pans one or two round pieces should be procured, or stiff cardboard will answer.

In the case of all fine seeds, like gloxinias, begonias, lobelias, etc., the seed needs no covering. It should be sown on the surface, after the soil has been watered, and in the case of larger seeds care should be taken to cover them thinly but evenly. Great care ought to be taken not to allow them to become dry after sowing. Do not on any account use the hose over them, but a watering can with a fine rose attached. If space is precious you can, after watering, place several flats one over the other, being always careful to uncover them as soon as the seeds are seen to be germinating.

The following seeds can be sown now: Asters, early varieties like Comet and Queen of Earlies; ten weeks' stock, verbena, Phlox Drummondi, Salvia splendens, Grevillea robusta, a useful decorative foliage plant; Dracæna Australis and congesta, petunias, fibrous-rooted and tuberous begonias, heliotropes, antirrhinum, pentstemon, ageratum, single annual hollyhocks, vinca and dianthus. It is too early yet to sow zinnias, ricinus (caster oil plant), Cobæa scandens, Nicotiana Sanderæ or affinis and moonflowers. Smilax and Asparagus plumosus nanus will now germinate freely in a warm house.

Propagation.

From now on the cutting bench should be well filled. In addition to coleus and alternanthera referred to last week, cuttings should be gotten in of achyranthes, lemon verbena, fuchsias, Hydrangea Otaksa, heliotrope, lantana and other plants there will be a call for later. Probably there are some chryanthemums you wish you had more of. Get some cuttings of these in right away. You will be able to propagate from these again long before you need to take cuttings for bench culture unless you are a grower of specimen blooms. We need hardly say that no sunshine should fall on the cutting bench. An hour's sun on an unprotected bench will nearly ruin it. Also be careful to water quite freely until stock is rooted, then keep a little drier until potted or boxed. Never allow cuttings to remain any longer than necessary in the bench after they are rooted. They only become hard and stunted.

The Use of Newspapers.

Every progressive retail florist is interested in how others in his line have increased business and the method employed by Schaefer's, Inc., Newburgh, N. Y., will appeal to many similarly situated. Schaefer's have a range of twenty-five houses averaging twenty feet by 150 feet and grow a general line of cut flowers, bedding plants, palms, etc., selling their product at retail from their own store. There are also four other florists in their city with a combined capacity about equal to theirs. G. F. Chadborn, treasurer of the company, describes the situation as follows:

"In former years we were obliged to ship more or less of our product to the wholesale commission men in New York and elsewhere, the returns for which were not always just as satisfactory as desired, for we always had stock to sell when the market was well supplied and nothing to spare when the market was bare. About three years ago we conceived the idea of pushing our local retail trade in an endeavor to dispose of more stock at retail prices, leaving less to ship away at wholesale. This looked feasible to us as Newburgh is a city of 25,000 inhabitants, is located on the banks of the Hudson river sixty miles from New York city, and has an excellent class of people.

"We had previously used only a 2-inch single column space in one paper (we have four), but decided to try a larger space and instead of using the usual card, running the same from year to year without change, to use some up-to-date matter, display it attractively and change it weekly. We accordingly enlarged our space to three inches double column, inserting it in the two papers having the largest circulation. We then arranged with a young man here, who had but recently taken up advertisement writing as a business, to write up and lay out our stuff for us for a period of six months on trial. The success of the scheme was apparent almost immediately, as we began to receive inquiries and orders at once for such plants, flowers, etc., as we specially mentioned in the advertisement. There is hardly a week now but somebody mentions having read our advertisement, remarking as to its attractiveness, etc.

"We are now selling at retail nearly everything we grow and at a very satisfactory advance as to final balancing of our profit and loss account over the old method, and altogether we are very well satisfied with our present arrangement.

"The laying out of the advertisement, writing of matter and choice of cuts are left entirely with our advertising man. Some of the cuts are his own drawings; others are purchased ready made from a stock cut concern.

"We are positive that the right kind of advertising pays florists as well as it does dry goods merchants and other lines of mercantile business. In addition to doing our work our man is writing ads for a number of florists in other places, having made a sort of specialty of florists' advertising through what he terms The Florists' Advertising Club, which enables retail florists throughout the United States to obtain copy and cuts for attractive and profitable advertisements at a minimum cost."

A WOMAN'S ENTERPRISE.

A great many women make better than a living in the flower business and are entitled to due credit for their efforts. Mrs. E. A. Anderson, whose store at 14 Colorado avenue, Chicago, is shown in the accompanying illustrations, did not start in the business for love of flowers, but from love of life and love of the children dependent upon her. She had not the ability to pay a full month's rent in advance when she rented her present stand, then conducted by Mrs. Anna Decker, a sister of C. Frauenfelder and now in the business at West Pullman, Ill. In the course of time Mrs. Anderson was able to buy the store of Mrs. Decker and as soon as she had it paid for and a little money in the bank, she replaced the old building with a substantial two-story brick structure, which she now has nearly clear. She lives in the apartments over the store and is on hand early and late, doing a constantly increasing business. While she is pleased at her success as a bread-earner, her pride is her two children, a boy and a girl.

STORE PLANS WANTED.

I am looking for a location to build a first-class retail store in the residence portion of Kansas City. What I want to know is which side of a street that runs north and south is the better for a retail store, also the better side of a street that runs east and west. I would like some plans and specifications for the building. I want to build a two-story residence adjoining the flower store, or build all together. If any REVIEW readers have anything that they think is right I wish they would send it to me and I will pay all expenses of express both ways and if they should produce what I want I will give $50 for the plans. This offer holds good until April 1. This phase of our business I have never seen discussed in the trade papers. It seems to me that florists should have some better stores than we have built for general purposes.

HOUSE OF VIOLETS.

I have planned to build an east and west house, 30x100, for head lettuce and try Marie Louise violets in about one-fourth of the house. But on reading what Galloway's violet book says about north and south houses giving better results than east and west houses, I am uncertain as to whether it would not be better to build a small north and south house for violets. Please give me your opinion. G. G.

Well, it all depends. So many conditions not mentioned in the query would have a bearing on the answer that one hardly likes to advise. If, as appears on first reading, G. G. can build another house as well as not, I would advise doing so; but if he does not wish to go to the additional expense of another house, or his ground is not favorable, or his boiler capacity limited, or he knows nothing about violets and only desires to experiment, I would say try part of the proposed lettuce house. He can easily put a partition in it and have separate heating coils in it, so that he can maintain the desired temperature.

I can assure him that I have seen as fine violets as were ever grown, growing in east and west houses; in fact, during the short, cloudy days of winter they are all right. But taking it earlier and later, when the sun gets brighter, or rather the days get brighter, then the north and south house gets the best of it, from the fact that at midday the light is diffused and does not come on the plants so strongly.

After getting all the information that one can on such matters, one will still have to come to a decision for himself, owing to all the many conditions that a stranger cannot consider, knowing nothing about them. R. E. S.

A GROWERS' COMBINE.

There have for some time been rumors afloat of the plans of a gentleman, now engaged in the trade, to form a combine to embrace the principal growers in a large extent of especially prosperous territory for the purpose of reaping the benefits which consolidation has gained in some other lines of business. It is reported that this is to be no gentlemen's agreement, but that the plants are to be acquired by purchase, and in one or two localities where there are good markets and excellent shipping facilities, but no large ranges to be acquired, big new modern plants are to be built.

Although the reputed originator of the idea is a man of considerable financial resource, of wide business experience and undoubted energy and ambition, his scheme as reported has not been taken seriously because of the economic conditions which govern in our trade. Thus far the law of supply and demand has been found inexorable in the wholesale cut flower markets. And there are two facts which have been developed by the operations in other lines which would have an important bearing on any plans for consolidations in the greenhouse industry. First, no combine has been successful which has sought its profit through an arbitrary advance in prices; profit has only come through economy in production and maintaining a steady market. Second, no combination not based on a control of raw materials has been free from constantly increasing competition, which has operated against the stability of the market. In the cut flower business the man who comes nearest to controlling his market is not necessarily the one who produces largest quantities, but the one who produces highest quality. If an operator controlling a large part of the supply should seek to take advantage of the necessities of the trade in times of light supply he would only succeed in accelerating the rate at which glass is now being put up by those who formerly were among the wholesalers' best customers. To those not green at the business it has for several seasons been apparent that one of the chief difficulties of those growing for wholesale is that too many of their customers have enough stock from their own glass in times of good crops and only call upon the wholesaler for specialties, or at times of short supply, when the wholesaler, too, is off crop.

It probably is a safe guess that if the combine in question actually were undertaken not many growers would refuse adequate cash offers, but that most of them would decline to take corporation stock in payment for their plants. Nor would the best men care to be identified either with the success or failure of a corporation which in the slightest degree embodied the trust idea. The florists' business is to this date, and to many it appears that it always will be, an individual enterprise.

VITIS THUNBERGI.

Of all the hardy vines Vitis Thunbergi is by far the most handsome, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine, and certainly it is one of the most remarkable introduced from China and Japan. For clothing buildings, pergolas, pillars, etc., it is of great value on account of its rapid growth, handsome foliage, and magnificent autumnal coloring. The leaves are fully one foot long and as much in width, very thick and leathery, with a dense tomentum on the under surface and rich, glossy green above.

In many respects this vine closely resembles V. Coignetiæ, but the growth is not quite so vigorous, though the foliage is larger, and the two can most easily be recognized in the autumn, when V. Thunbergi commences to put on its magnificent tints. Vitis Coignetiæ, though a rampant grower and a useful plant for many positions, is nevertheless disappointing in the autumn, and it is quite the exception to hear of a finely colored specimen. Of V. Thunbergi I have never heard any complaint in this respect, and have seen it coloring highly in several parts of the country.

The name of V. Thunbergi for this vine has often been disputed by botanists and there are many now who regard it as incorrect, and consider it to be a form of V. Coignetiæ. Nicholson's Dictionary gives V. Thunbergi as a synonym of V. Labrusca, but the Kew Hand List, which is more recent, includes V. Thunbergi as a separate species from China and Japan. In the most interesting booklet upon "Hardy Ornamental Vines," by James H. Veitch, Vitis Thunbergi is described as reaching Europe from China and Japan.

FEEDING.

The general treatment of the houses during the next few weeks will entail a great deal of work and care and, as the spring work increases, there is often a tendency to let the old stock look after itself and beyond giving it its daily watering, syringing and ventilation it receives little attention. We are yet a long way from the end of the season and if we expect the stock to do a good season's work we must supply it with the sinews of war.

Stock which is strong and has been doing good work during the winter and fall should now receive a liberal supply of food as the element necessary to produce fine flowers must now be pretty well exhausted, or in such a condition that it is no longer available for food. To supplement this a good rich mulch will be of great benefit. Previous to applying the mulch it is also beneficial to apply a sprinkling of bone meal. Liquid feeding can also be indulged in with good results, but this should always be used rather weak for a first application.

Where large, well shaped and highly colored buds are expected the plants must have the proper amount of food at the proper time, be carefully watered and ventilated, and all this can only be accomplished after carefully studying the wants of the plants, both as regards food and air.

The American Rose Society's show, which will be held in Washington next month, will be an exhibition of the effect of the highest grade of rose culture, which should be of the greatest interest to growers and lovers of this queen of flowers.

The work accomplished by the society in the past has been of incalculable benefit to the commercial grower who is every day reaping this benefit and in many cases without making inquiry as to the source from which it is derived.

It is the duty of every rose grower to identify himself with this society by becoming a member, lending it strength by his presence at its meetings and adding his quota of experience to the rest for the benefit of the whole.

By attending the exhibition next month in full strength it will do much to encourage the work, add interest to the cause and be of lasting benefit and profit to each and every one attending. There is a splendid list of special premiums and any grower who has an idea that his stock is the best in the market will be well rewarded should he prove it in the exhibition. Ribes.

TROUBLE WITH ROSES.

I am having trouble with my roses. The plants are losing their leaves, the blooms are getting smaller and there are only a few of them. Early in the season the plants did well, the flowers being of fair size. I think they need some fertilizer and perhaps are kept too dry. I would like to know if something can be done on a crop for Easter. The weather has been dark and rainy and we have mildew. The soil is clay loam.

H. G. F.

Without examining a specimen, or seeing the conditions under which the roses were grown, it would be unsafe to say what the trouble really is, but of a certainty they should not be fed in their present condition, as that would only accentuate the trouble.

If they have been run so dry that the bottom of the soil has become dusty, that would account for the whole of the trouble and the true remedy would be to gradually begin giving more water and continue doing so until the whole of the soil is of a uniform moistness; then watch results and vary the supply as circumstances or weather may demand.

Even under the most skilful treatment I fear there is little show for a good crop at Easter. Ribes.

IN YOUNG'S BIG HOUSE.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph made recently in the big greenhouse of the John Young Co., at Bedford Station, N. Y., a few miles from the metropolis. The house is 56x 701 and is devoted to Beauties. The results to date have been far ahead of Mr. Young's expectations, the cut at Christmas having been especially heavy. The location is an ideal one for cut flower growing. Mr. Young has ninety-five acres of land amid the West Chester hills and it is not unlikely that ultimately there may be here a much larger range of glass.

ERRATIC TREATMENT OF ROSES.

Will you please try and discover what the trouble is with the enclosed rose bush, we find several in this condition on our benches. The edges of some of the leaves get brown and dry and the leaves finally die. We notice it more on the Chatenay than Bride.

S. F. Co.

The specimen sent shows every sign of having been subjected to erratic treatment. The soil is of fine quality and the plants have evidently done well in their younger stage, but seem to have been badly treated since firing commenced. Erratic watering, such as allowing them to become too dry and then overwatering, and also careless ventilation, will account for their present state.

While their vitality is so low they should be kept medium dry. Keep up a moist atmosphere, give no feeding and keep at a night temperature not to exceed 56 degrees with a day temperature of from 60 to 75 degrees, according to intensity of sunshine. With the longer days and increased sunshine they ought by this treatment to recover after a little time. Ribes.

STOCK FOR STANDARD ROSES.

What kind of stocks shall I use for tree roses, and where can I find them? Will strong stems of Manetti or Mme. Plantier do? What kind of roses do best on them? D. H.

We should say Manetti stocks, if sufficiently strong, should answer well. We have had no experience with Mme. Plantier as a stock. Rosa rugosa, however, and the common dog rose, Rosa canina, should answer well. We do not know where the stocks for tree, or standard roses as they are usually called, are procurable in America. Most of this stock is imported from France or Great Britain. W. N. C.

AMERICAN ROSE SOCIETY.

A meeting of the executive committee of the American Rose Society was held February 11, in Traendly & Schenck's office, New York city. The president, Robert Simpson, reported that Robert Craig, of Philadelphia, Wm. F. Kasting, of Buffalo, and P. J. Hauswirth, of Chicago, had consented to act as judges at the Washington exhibition.

The following have been added to the list of special prizes: A $25 by W. A. Manda, of South Orange, for the largest and most varied collection of cut roses of all classes, one or more blooms in a vase. Wm. H. Ernest, of Washington, offers $25 for a group of decorative plants covering at least 100 square feet. Vaughan's Seed Store, New York, offers $10 in gold for six plants of White Baby Rambler rose, grown in 5-inch pots or larger. For the best vase of yellow roses of any variety, $10 in gold is offered by Siebrecht & Son, New Rochelle. For the best fifty blooms of Golden Gate, a silver cup valued at $25 is offered by W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia. For the best twenty-five blooms of La Detroit $25 is offered by John Breitmeyer's Sons, Detroit.

The schedules of the society's prizes covering the joint affairs of the American Rose Society and the Washington Florists' Club was submitted; but there will be a supplementary list issued, as the list of prizes is increasing. Many people have shown an interest who had not been heard from until within a few days.

E. Gurney Hill will read a paper on "New Varieties." There will be two questions offered for discussion at the society meeting, as follows: First: what definite work can the American Rose Society take up at this time for its members, in particular, for the rose-loving public in general, that it does not now do? Second: granted that a largely increased membership is desirable and essential to the permanence and usefulness of the American Rose Society, how may it best be obtained and where shall we find ready responses, among the professional florists and gardeners, or who are commonly called amateurs?

The Washington Florists' Club is making strenuous efforts to make this show a decided success. The Arlington hotel has been chosen as the headquarters of the American Rose Society. The official meetings of the society will be held in the exhibition hall, corner Fifteenth and E streets, N. W., Washington, D. C., the first meeting beginning at 8 p. m., March 13.

The secretary reported that a pamphlet is now in press, covering the matters of the past, the constitution of the society, and a chapter on "Roses," from the Woman's Hardy Garden, by Helen Rutherford Ely. This work follows in the line which was followed, by W. J. Stewart a year or more ago and is intended for distribution to members and others interested in becoming members of the society.

CARNATIONS

MR. RUDD'S SEEDLINGS.

ED. REVIEW:—As comment has several times been made on the high numbers given my seedlings, a little explanation of our system of numbering may prevent our being credited with more work in that line than we have done.

We number all crosses each year, beginning with No. 1. To these numbers we add the two figures denoting the year. The letters added distinguish the different seedlings from the same pod. 16802a means cross No. 168 of the year 1902 and the first plant blooming from that pod of seed, which we saved for further trial. We might also have 16802b, 16802c, and 16802d, for example. These would all be from the same pod, and the letters would indicate the order in which the first bloom appeared.

This method of numbering is very simple and, to the initiated, conveys considerable information. W. N. RUDD.

CARNATION NOTES.—WEST.

Seasonable Treatment.

During the last week we have had almost continual bright weather and I dare say that every grower is glad of such a change. It is surprising, though, how the quality of the carnations has kept up in spite of the unfavorable weather we have had since a week before Christmas. It shows what abundant ventilation and careful watering will do. Those who have been less careful along that line have been complaining of soft blooms, weak stems and too many splits.

Those whose stock has grown soft from lack of ventilation, etc., will be having their troubles for a week or two yet, until the plants become accustomed to the bright sunshine, and great care must be exercised in the watering and ventilating. The plants will wilt badly during the middle of the day and you must counteract that as much as you can. About 10 o'clock take the hose and spray them lightly overhead and dampen any walks that are exposed to the strong sun to help keep the atmosphere moist. About 1 o'clock repeat the spraying, but be sure it is light, so the plants will dry off again before night. The paths, too, should be comparatively dry by evening, so don't overdo that part of it. A few days of this treatment will hold them up until the growth hardens enough to stand the full sunshine. More watering will be needed, too, especially on the south side of the beds, but don't think you can prevent wilting by watering heavily at the roots. It won't help any, you must depend on the syringing for that. But watch the soil closely and do not allow them to become too dry.

It will be more difficult to maintain a uniform state of moisture in the soil, because it will dry out so much more from one day to the next and you must often water a little sooner than you would in cloudy weather in order to prevent the other extreme, which would likely be more harmful. The plants can stand a moister soil during bright weather, too, so no harm should result.

You can help matters considerably by applying a light mulch of loose material to the beds. Half-rotted stable manure will answer the purpose perfectly. Put it on a scant inch thick and spread it out evenly over the soil. After that is put on you must be careful with your watering, lest you get them too wet, as evaporation will be slow. The mulch need not be much of a food, though of course it is sure to contain some food and if you have been feeding regularly you will do well to cut it out until you have watered through this mulch a few times. If you have not been feeding any and you think your plants are in good condition to take some extra food then you can first sprinkle the soil with finely ground bone or whatever you may prefer to feed with. This mulch will keep the bone moist and help to dissolve it.

If the plants came through the winter in good shape thus far they will likely need a little feeding from now on. Bone meal, sheep manure, cow manure and dried blood are about all you need. In fact, you can get along without the last named, but it is a good thing for quick results. The quality may be good now, but you want to build up the plants now for the spring crop, so it will be of good texture.

This bright weather is severe on the cuttings in the propagating bench, and you must keep your wits about you, else there will be trouble. In taking cuttings from the plants you should be careful, too, to take them off when the plants are in a fresh condition. In the morning before the sun has gained much strength is the best time. With a little forethought you can take off enough to keep you busy during the day and by keeping them damp and covered they will be in excellent condition.

CARNATIONS IN THE SOUTH.

[A paper by W. B. Patterson, Jr., of Montgomery, Ala., and read before the Society of Southern Florists at the New Orleans Convention, February 14 to 16, 1907.]

I have been asked to write a paper on "Carnation Culture in the South." It strikes me that this is quite a broad subject, for we have a large area when we take in what is known as "the south." In fact, I am sure that there are just as wide differences as to climate and soil as there are between the New England and the western states.

My knowledge being limited to Alabama and adjoining states, I will endeavor to give my personal experience, and those facts which I have picked up from neighboring growers, rather than attempt a broader scope.

I believe that we growers in the south have a far more difficult problem in growing carnations than our northern brethren. Our long, hot summers and lack of good soil are our most serious handicaps.

Treatment of Cuttings.

In selecting the cuttings I am always careful to take them from the healthiest and strongest plants, using side cuttings from the blooming stem always, except when we wish to work up the stock of a certain variety; then we use top cuttings also; but we have found the side cuttings root better and make the strongest and best shaped plants.

We use fine, clean sand. It does not make much difference about the sand, just so it is clean and entirely free from decayed matter of any kind.

We use a little bottom heat, about 56 to 58 degrees, with a top or outside temperature of 48 to 50 degrees. With too much bottom heat the vitality of the plant is injured. Our first effort, six years ago, to root carnations was a total failure, due entirely to too little water. For the first two weeks you cannot give the cuttings too much water: then afterwards water very lightly, until, after three weeks, none at all. In thirty days most varieties will be rooted well. If you can so arrange it that the cuttings can get the full sun after two weeks they will make better cuttings. The more light the better after the cuttings are struck.

Transplanting.

We transplant them into a bench with about two and one-half inches of soil planting them one and one-half inches apart in the row and rows about two and one-half inches apart. We find this method better than pots, for then the cuttings are not liable to become stunted or pot-bound and do not dry as when they are planted in pots. When the time comes to plant them in the field, we cut them out with a flat trowel.

We always try to plant in the field the first good weather we get after March 25, believing in an early start and early planting in the houses afterward. In our locality this date is not too early, for we never have cold weather enough to injure them after March 25. Probably this date would be somewhat too early for those north of our latitude. After getting them planted we keep the cultivator and hoes going once or twice a week. In fact, as often as the weather will permit we cultivate shallow and often, keeping a light, loose layer of soil on top all the time.

A Problem of Soil.

By the second week in July we are ready to plant indoors again. But before taking this up I will take up the soil. Here we have our most vexing problem. We have been using ordinary red clay subsoil mixed with manure in the proportion of three parts clay to one part manure. This soil is made up one year before using. In fact, this soil is the only kind used by the majority of growers in Alabama, Georgia and Mississippi. The top soil in most of these localities is too light and sandy.

We have this year invested in thirty-two acres of an old pasture. This soil is what is known as black prairie soil, and this is the best farming soil in the state. It can be found in all degrees of stiffness, to a sandy loam. It closely resembles the prairie soil of the western states and is found in limited areas in Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, the belt of it in Alabama running just south of Montgomery.

Treatment of Plants.

We use about four to five inches of soil on the benches and give the plants a distance of ten to twelve inches, depending on the size of the plants and variety planted. We have an experienced man in the field to dig the plants, being careful to get as many roots as possible and to injure as few as possible.

Just before planting we give the soil a light dressing of bone meal. We are careful not to use too much, for I believe too much of it retards the early taking hold of the soil by the plants. After planting, being careful not to plant too deeply, we give the plants a thorough soaking. When the soil becomes dry enough, we keep it scratched and loose half an inch down so that the air is admitted to the soil freely. We are careful not to give them too much water to start on, but keep them rather on the dry side for the first month or six weeks. As the plants take a firmer hold they require more water.

After the plants have begun to grow nicely then we stake them, getting the lanky varieties staked first. We use the model carnation support, but believe a combination of this support and string wire is just as good, using the rings to support the body of the plant and the wire and string to support the shoots.

We always spray our carnations on bright, sunshiny days, trying to get as much force as possible. Using judgment as to the varieties more subject to rust, and being sure that the day will be clear, we are always able to keep down red spider and have no trouble with the rust, except where some varieties have contracted it before housing, especially during a wet summer which we sometimes have. A solution of this I believe is early housing or indoor culture, of which I will have more to say a little later.

The first feeding is given about the middle of November or the first part of December in the form of one-half inch of well-decayed cow manure with light dressing of hard-wood ashes and bone meal. By January 1 the roots are all through this mulch. Then we begin feeding liquid manure, using it weak at the first three or four applications, making it a little stronger each watering.

We give them a watering with this once a week. We use all wood ashes and a little bone meal about twice a month, mixing it with a little rotted manure and giving it to them in the form of a light dressing, letting the water wash it into the soil. Toward the first part of April, when the sun gets hotter and the soil begins to crack lightly, especially along the edges of the benches, we give them another mulch, a little heavier than the one we gave in the early winter.

Insects.

Our most dangerous enemy is thrips. In fact, it is hard to get entirely rid of them, for you can find them on everything outdoors during the summer. Our best remedy is fumigating with tobacco dust and red pepper. Spraying with To-bak-ine with a fine spray pump is also an efficient remedy. We found it a little more expensive than tobacco dust, but I believe it has a quicker effect in that it reaches the insects quicker and more readily than the smoke. We keep a close lookout for this insect, for it may ruin the plants before we know it. In fact, after the plants have taken good hold of the soil I think it as good a plan to spray them with To-bak-ine once a week, even if we do not see signs of thrips being present, or fumigate with tobacco and red pepper as soon as the houses are closed in.

The aphides are easily handled. In fact, we get rid of all of them in trying to keep down thrips.

With careful spraying we never have much troubles with the red spider.

Diseases.

The most dreaded and the only disease that has given us any trouble is stem-rot. This was due mostly to planting the carnations in the same field two or more years in succession. I think it a good plan never to plant carnations in the same plot of ground the succeeding year. Carrying this plan out strictly, and being sure that no kindred disease, as wilt or stem-rot in other plants, has been in the field we intend to plant, I am sure this disease will give us no trouble. Sometimes when the summers are rainy we have trouble with rust. But by housing early in July this is usually avoided, for we generally have this rainy spell in August.

Indoor Culture.

I would like to say here a little about indoor culture entirely. From the little experience that I have had on this line, and what I have seen from greenhouses in adjoining cities I am sure it can be made a success.

The Lawson, Enchantress and kindred types have already proved adaptable to indoor culture and I think with more experience as to the care and growing of them indoors it will succeed field culture, and I feel sure that I will be able to say more about this next year.

Varieties.

The following are the varieties grown by us: For white, our mainstays are Boston Market and White Cloud. We also grow Wolcott, Moonlight, Fred Burki, White Perfection, Lieut. Peary and The Queen. White Perfection is undoubtedly the best commercial white to date. For pink, we grow mostly E. A. Nelson and Lawson. We also grow Joost, Nelson Fisher and Helen Goddard in limited numbers. For light pink, we grow Enchantress only. What is the use of growing others in this shade when you have Enchantress? We have a rose-pink sport of Enchantress which is a good one; probably the same thing that is on the market elsewhere. For red, we grow Crusader and Cardinal as the best. We also grow Red Lawson and America. For maroon shades, we grow Harlowarden and Glow Worm. The last named I consider better than Harlowarden.

We have invested in some of the newer varieties, namely Winsor, Helen Gould, White Enchantress, Aristocrat, Victory, Red Chief and Beacon, which we cannot say much about until they have a thorough trial.

Encouraging Prospects.

I feel much encouraged that we southern florists and growers are now able to organize as a body and can get together and talk over our experiences and I believe that this first convention marks an epoch in our growth. It means that the south is to come forward soon, in the introduction of new varieties of carnations, roses and other greenhouse and garden plants, and I believe that in this way we will be able to get varieties especially adapted to our soil, climate, etc.

IRIS DELAVAYI.

There is much to admire in this new species of grassy iris from Yunnan—a free-growing plant that seems to be very accommodating in its requirements, and showing such good qualities that entitle it to rank with I. aurea, I. gigantea and I. Mounieri, both in border planting and for waterside.

The flowers are superb, colored the richest violet, blotched very slightly with white on the long, narrow "fall" petals, and they are produced in plenty from clumps two years established. I have it growing well by a waterside under the treatment given to Iris Kæmpferi, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine, and its growth is satisfactory in every respect—the spikes reaching a height of fifty inches, each yielding several flowers. The leafage is particularly graceful, and may be likened to that of the lesser reed mace—narrow, slender, slightly arching, and over a yard in height.

I saw it last autumn in Scotland thriving equally well under drier conditions, growing in competition with asters, border phloxes, and pyrethrums. Its growth there was not so tall, but flowers were produced in plenty and they were of good size. The lance-shaped, drooping falls remind one of the rarer Japanese Iris albo-purpurea, and many of the American group, but none of these has such intense coloring. This rich violet is rare among irises. Reticulata and Douglasiana alone have it, and it is rarer still among plants that can be used by waterside in July and August. This iris appears to be quite hardy anywhere in Britain.

PROPAGATING.

It is none too soon to begin propagating for the coming season's work. All of the early varieties, and also the slow growers, should be put into the sand this month. Under the head of slow growers I class such varieties as Beatrice May, May Seddon, Merza, Nellie Pockett, Cheltoni and Mary Ann Pockett. Early propagation of these varieties permits of their attaining a good length of stem, which, when propagated later, they do not have a chance to do. Beatrice May, rooted as many commercial growers would root it, in May or June, will not attain a height of over eighteen inches and such a stem is hardly long enough for cutting.

The extra early kinds, too, must be under way in good season so that good stock can be set out in May; this being necessary because, in the case of Monrovia, for instance, buds must be secured late in July, to obtain the flowers during the last of September. The grower who is looking for very early flowers must always keep in mind that it means early propagation, early planting and early bud selection. The last year was perhaps the best that the growers of early varieties ever enjoyed; prices were excellent and the buyers were clamorous for flowers. Whether this will continue this year we cannot say, but let us hope so. The scarcity of other stock was a prime factor in bringing about this result and, while we are not selfish enough to desire to profit by our neighbor's loss, it is to be hoped that the early kinds will find a warm welcome awaiting them. One great advantage of the early kinds is the fact that they are gone early and make room for a lot of stock just at a time when room is needed, with everything waiting to be housed from frost.

Getting back to the propagating. The operation of making cuttings and putting them in the sand is so simple and well understood that there is no need of going into detail; but one should, wherever possible, judiciously select the cuttings. The suckers that spring out of the ground around the stem of the parent plant make the best cuttings. The shoots that appear on the old stem should never be used, as they almost invariably run up to bud when they begin to grow, and never make really good plants.

It is, of course, assumed that the stock plants are up on a bench in a good light position somewhere and not thrown under the bench and left there. Simply because a chrysanthemum will make some kind of a growth, no matter where it is put, is no reason why it should not get a fair show. I like to plant my stock plants out on a bench in new soil and when this is done the old stools will produce quantities of stock; when, if left in the old, sour soil, oftentimes the plants will go back and, in any case, they do not as a rule seem to push out so freely as the transplanted stock. I have for years propagated the finest cuttings I could get in November and used these for stock plants to propagate from in early spring. This method does away with the old plants, with their legacy of leaf-spot, fly and other diseases, as one is propagating only from vigorous young plants. This sounds perhaps like forcing to some growers, who are in favor of holding the old plants in a semi-dormant condition all winter, "giving them a rest." But if the young stock is grown in a proper temperature, 45 to 50 degrees, they produce better cuttings in spring than the old stools, and unless rushed to death they, to my mind, give better results.

CHARLES H. TOTTY.

MONROE, MICH.—Walter Vandegrift, of Adrian, has bought property here and will engage in the florists' business.

MUMS IN THE SOUTH.

[A paper by F. P. Davis, Mobile, read before the Society of Southern Florists at the New Orleans Convention, February 14 to 16.]

The chrysanthemum to be a commercial flower must have perfectly clean foliage and the delicate texture which can only be had under glass, and, therefore, the chrysanthemum of commerce must be so grown.

The Only Way.

Many inquiries have been made by beginners as to how to grow chrysanthemums in the garden in the south. I have read some of the answers by authorities on the subject of mum growing in cold climates, and have been as often amused. When such queries have been submitted to me my invariable answer has been, "It cannot be done." Surely the plant will grow, and grow luxuriantly, in the open, but the flower is coarse, soiled, weather beaten, thrips eaten, and what not. Some of our retailers grow it outdoors and use it largely for funeral work; for which class of work it is well known anything can be used, as the dead man never kicks, and his family, however unattractive the flowers sent in by friends may be, would not give expressions to wound the feelings of such friends. I make this apology for having been assigned to address the convention of southern florists on "Growing Chrysanthemums Under Glass"—when there is no other way to grow them.

A Matter of Knowledge.

Mum growing in the south, unlike most of the other commercial flowers, has passed the age of guessing. There is no difference as to the knowledge required to produce fine flowers in Chicago, or in New Orleans. The difference is in applying the knowledge to the conditions, and in choosing the varieties that respond to the conditions. The southern grower must not be misled by the achievements of our brother workers of the north with any variety. He must do his own experimenting, without fear of cost and with the courage to quickly throw away hundreds of varieties that are sure to disappoint him. He must make his own selection.

Very early varieties are useless for experimental purposes. Anything that gives a flower sooner than Bassett or Robinson, is sure failure. Only varieties that open quickly and produce perfect flowers will do. Such varieties as Jeanne Nonin and Eaton are always disappointing. It takes them too long to finish.

Propagate Late.

To begin, we must propagate as late as possible. The shorter time in the growth, the shorter time of exposure to the ravages of the twenty or more insect enemies we have to encounter. I propagate the latter part of April for best results. Here I encounter the most stubborn problem in growing chrysanthemums in a hot climate. The stock plants are in vigorous growth and the cuttings naturally soft and apt to damp off in the sand. I find this tendency to damp off greatly encouraged by the fungus from the pine wood of the bench, and to prevent this I struck on the idea of lining the propagating bench with glass. With copious watering and entire shade, the striking of the cuttings is easy.

The flowers will be from three weeks to a month later than the northern grown mums, and so the later planting is equalized by the later blooming. It is with all science and great difficulty that we get Robinson for All Saints' day.

As to the treatment during growth, there is no difference whether it be in Canada or Mexico. What applies to Chicago in August will apply here in September.

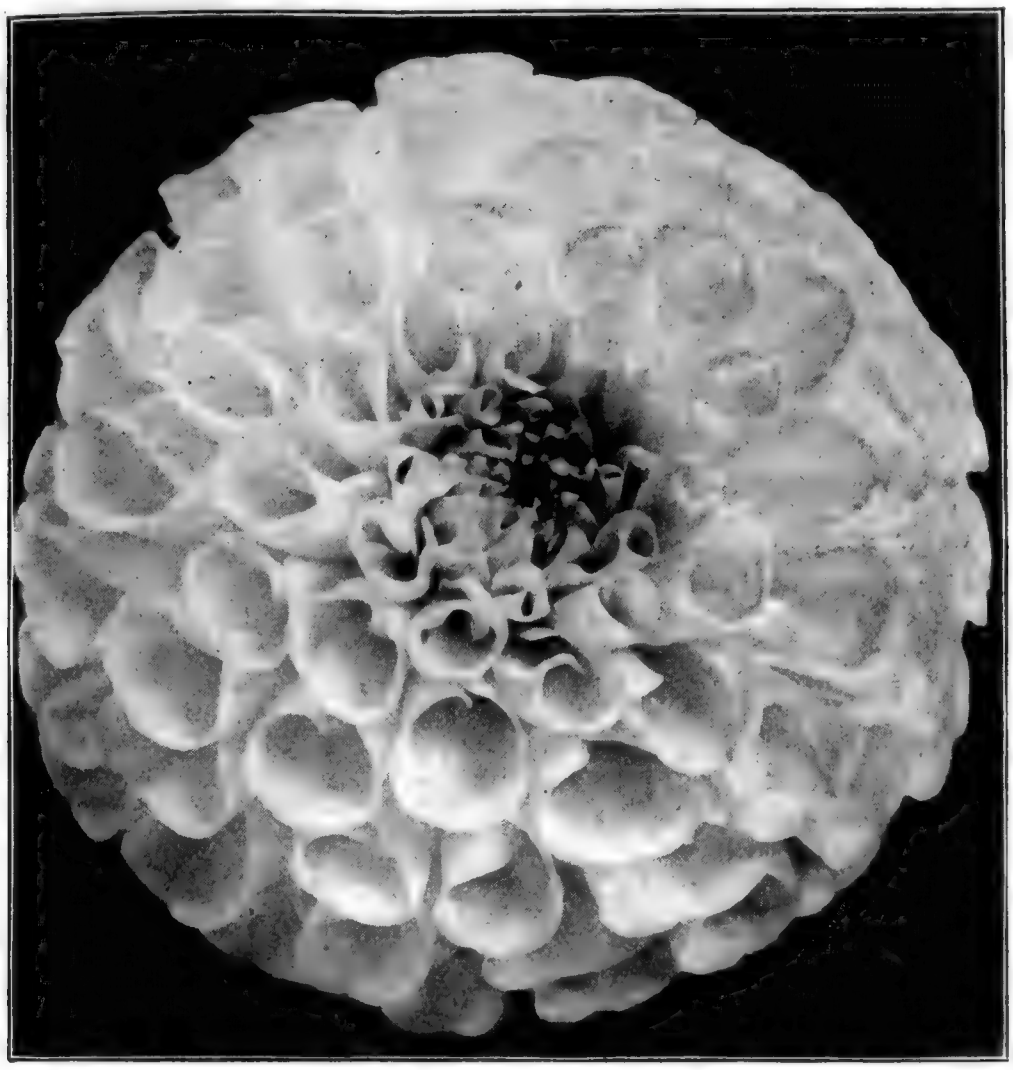
Insect Pests.

The preventive treatment for insects is the same, except that the greatest caution must be taken in fumigating on account of heat. Cyanide is the surest for all insects, but very dangerous, except in the hands of the most experienced. I do not mean dangerous to man, but great caution must be observed lest we sicken our plants beyond recovery. I cannot, therefore, advise its general use. Experiment on a small scale, and learn to handle it, and it is a luxury, and the cheapest. Light and frequent use of tobacco in any form is effective and safe for all except mealy bugs, and a man who is negligent enough to let the mealy bugs get into his plants does not deserve to succeed.

Our worst enemy is thrips. They come after the harvest is in sight, and they surely come. After their presence is known it is too late to fight. Regular and frequent fumigating with tobacco in some shape is the only hope of keeping thrips out and, in very dry seasons at blooming time, even this fails.

Varieties.

As to varieties, everyone must choose for himself, from his own tests, in his own locality. After trying almost every variety introduced in the last twenty years, I have settled on Bassett, Robinson, Ivory, Appleton, Jones, Yellow Jones, Chadwick, Golden Chadwick, Old Golden Gate, Golden Wedding, Queen or Alice Byron, Mrs. Weeks, and perhaps White Bonnaffon. You may notice that pink and the darker shades are not in my list. They are all disappointing in color and seldom called for. Every chrysanthemum plant I grow must produce a salable bloom. You may notice also that all of these are old varieties, ancient varieties I may say.



All I can say of last year's varieties is that none of them stand a wind of ninety-four miles an hour. On September 26 such a wind came along my way, and when it had died down sufficiently for me to put my head out of the cellar, a few scraps of broken glass was what was left of my mum house. Some of my hopeful new varieties landed over in the next county, and somehow I lost interest in last year's introductions.

Holds to Standard Varieties.

Of the year previous I had hopes of Nonin, Roi d'Italie, and Beatrice May; but I find nothing to displace in my Dahlia Mrs. Gordon Abbott.

Dahlia Governor Guild.

standard list, except that I would add May but for its softness. I am growing nothing in the modern list because I am unwilling to throw away what experience has taught me to be better. The season is once a year and short, and, as yet with us, it is the flower that is novel and not the variety.

My standard is that every plant must give a perfect salable flower and the bloom must unfold quickly. On account of the character of help I am sometimes compelled to put up with, there must be no great science in taking the bud. In my list you may notice that I have only varieties that give sure flowers from any, or the best looking, bud that appears. Robinson and Bassett are the only exceptions, and I take the crown on these, as they give better stems.

In this trespass on your time I have made no effort to instruct the beginner. I am conscious of addressing an audience in which many of the growers could instruct me. I have endeavored to give only my experience on a subject common to the humblest florist, and so thoroughly threshed out by the brains of the floral world, that only the conceited novice would venture to give instruction.

Future Possibilities.

You may notice that my experience has been only as relates to the commercial flower. The exhibition chrysanthemum is not yet needed. The local show of the New Orleans society is the only effort in the show direction in our section. This will all come in good time, however; the organization of the Society of Southern Florists is a move. The south is of great possibilities. Our success and advancement will be measured by the realization of our meagre knowledge of the beautiful subject we all so much love, and our willingness to be instructed by that simple yet sublime teacher—Nature.

NEW DAHLIAS.

Among the season's novelties is a set of new decorative dahlias being sent out by W. W. Rawson & Co., Boston. These were raised by a Mr. Johnson, of Brockton, Mass., and were awarded honorable mention by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society when first exhibited.

Governor Guild is described as the largest pure white show dahlia in existence. It is without even the least suggestion of any shade either at the base of the petal of center of the flower. The flower is full and round, built loosely, giving the flower a far more graceful appearance than show dahlias usually have. The spread of the flowers is five inches. They are borne on erect, long stems and appear far above the foliage. The plants grow five feet high and are profuse bloomers.

Edward Le Favour is deep rose shading to a most pleasing distinct shade of pink. The flowers are globe shaped, measure four inches and over, and are produced in great abundance on bushy plants four feet high. A bouquet of these dahlias produces a most showy effect.

Mrs. Gordon Abbott is a giant in size and distinct in color. Several specimens last fall measured five and a half inches. The color is brightest golden, mottled, speckled and striped intense scarlet.

Mrs. Stuyvesant Fish is rich, deep amber, the first decorative dahlia of this color. The flower often is seven inches in diameter, very double, petals gracefully curved. The plants grow four feet high and with fair treatment produce flowers quite early in the season.

W. W. Rawson is oddly formed and delicately colored. Considering formation of flower, it appears to be a cross between Grand Duke Alexis and Mrs. Roosevelt. It has thrown off the stiff formation of the first, retained the more flatly fluted petal of the latter, but improved the appearance by being more compact. The flower is well built up, round and measures six to seven inches in diameter. The color is white overlaid with ametnyst blue, each petal being completely colored.

Fireburst is of immense size. It is a seedling of Le Colosse, has broader and longer petals, is more flatly built but a far more intense scarlet, slightly shaded orange and produces blooms which sometimes measure eight inches.

THE complete schedules of the joint exhibition of the American Rose Society and the Washington Florists' Club have been issued and may be obtained by addressing either secretary, Benjamin Hammond, Fishkill, N. Y., or Chas. McCauley, Eighteenth and Kearney streets, Washington, D. C.

SPHAGNUM moss is one of the scarce items and prices are up.

PITTSBURG wants the convention of the American Carnation Society in 1909.

JOHN WESTCOTT, of Philadelphia, vice-president of the S. A. F., is spending a portion of the winter in Florida.

THE executive committee of the Society of American Florists will hold its annual meeting at Philadelphia March 11 and 12.

E. G. HILL, of Richmond, Ind., has recently returned from a trip through the southwest and reports the trade there in a most prosperous condition, especially in Oklahoma and Texas.

THE Chicago Florists' Club has invited the American Rose Society to forsake the east in 1908 and hold its annual March meeting and exhibition in Chicago.

THERE is a disposition on the part of large producers of rooted cuttings of carnations and roses to reverse the tendency to lower prices which has been the result of competition in recent years.

THE Detroit Florists' Club has adopted resolutions voicing the opposition of its members to the change of date for the S. A. F. convention, which will be up for consideration at the Philadelphia meeting next August.

IT is a general principle of law that that party to a contract who makes a mistake must bear the loss, if a loss is inevitable, and that such loss shall not be put off upon the innocent party. This rule is necessary in order to do equity and also in order to inculcate care in the handling of words and figures.

[How to Build Greenhouses, published by the John C. Moninger Co., 129 Blackhawk street, Chicago; price 10 cents, postpaid.]

With the rapid growth of the business of building greenhouses, and the general acceptance of the fact that it is cheaper in the long run to patronize a specialist in greenhouse construction instead of a planing mill, the John C. Moninger Co. has found its correspondence becoming bulky. With so many new people going into the trade, there is a constant stream of inquiries on how to build a greenhouse. While a manufacturer of building material always is glad to answer questions, the answering of them often calls for the expenditure of no little time. It is to fully and satisfactorily, yet economically, meet the demand for information that the Moninger Co. has issued its present illustrated booklet of twenty-four large pages and the outcome has been a compendium not only of value to the beginner but interesting and instructive to those who have built many greenhouses and are well posted on the subject. Every phase of the question is treated, from choosing the site to laying the glass and building the benches. The fine points of construction are illustrated with drawings so that the meaning may be most clear. A large part of the book is from the many years' experience of the Moninger Co., but several quotations are made from the "Florists' Manual," by William Scott, and a number of extracts from discussions which have appeared in the REVIEW are quoted as setting forth both sides of such questions as "Butted vs. Lapped Glass." By following the simple directions in this latest of "How to" booklets any man of average intelligence can put together a greenhouse in first-class shape.

STATE TO AID GROWERS.

On Wednesday, February 13, the Illinois state legislature had what they might have considered a visitation, although they expressed themselves as delighted with the friendly call of the gentlemen who came to argue for the appropriation for greenhouses for experimental purposes at the State Agricultural College. In the party were P. J. Foley, J. C. Vaughan and P. J. Hauswirth, of Chicago; J. F. Ammann, of Edwardsville, and Prof. A. C. Beal, of Champaign. Albert T. Hey, of Springfield, joined the delegation. Under the guidance of Representative Frank Heinl, son of Joseph Heinl, the veteran florist of Jacksonville, they waited upon the chairman of the appropriations committees of the house and senate and also upon the chairman of the steering committee.

It was easily evident that the efforts under the auspices of the Illinois State Florists' Association have had the effect of impressing the legislators with the importance of the greenhouse industry in Illinois. The committee was assured of the friendly interest of the legislators and were given encouragement for their request. It was advised that instead of undertaking the passage of a separate bill, the appropriation desired be asked for in the form of an amendment to the general appropriation measure for the State University. It was advised that the request be cut down to $15,000 for the two years and in this form it will go before the legislature.

Salt for Carnations.

In the issue of the REVIEW of February 7 A. F. J. B. replies to S. F. Co. and recommends a remedy for red spider. I think I can go him one better and herewith give my remedy.

I remove the pump from a five-gallon sprayer, insert a one-pound salt sack, containing about one-half pint of salt and then turn water in from a faucet until I have about four and one-half gallons of water. This thoroughly dissolves all the salt and keeps any sediment from getting into the sprayer. I then give all the carnations a thorough spraying once a week, if bad; if they are getting very bad, twice a week. I have found this to be one of the best remedies for stem-rot, both indoors and outdoors.

My opinion is that there is not one-half the salt used that should be used in the growing of carnations. I use it liberally in preparing my soil for the benches and I fail to see anything but good results. I believe it is a great preventive of stem-rot.

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

There has been a decided slump since last report. Several consecutive, warm, bright days have brought in a greater amount of stock than this market has had in three months and the advent of Lent has checked demand to a slight extent. Local trade has not been active since Valentine's day, but shipping demand continues excellent. Monday was a good day but Tuesday was decidedly dull and much stock was left over. As prices recede large buyers will again come into the market.

Roses are equal to all requirements, except Beauties. These continue in supply not up to the demand and quality is not high. Other roses leave nothing to be desired in quality and supply has so increased that average prices have fallen nearly one-half within ten days.

The carnation department was the first to feel the effect of increased receipts. There has been enough stock to take care of the trade for some time and within the last fortnight prices have gone down to the point where some unquotable rates are reported for clean-up sales. Pink is the slowest to move, but the supply of Enchantress is ahead of the demand. As long as the bright weather holds carnations will be on the bargain counter. It is to be regretted, for this is a season of the year when prices do not go up again easily if bad weather should check production.

There has been an inundation of bulbous stock. Fancy tulips are abundant and daffodils and jonquils are piling up in the wholesale houses. Common tulips are selling as low as $2 per hundred and the decline has been general in all departments. There have been greatly increased receipts of calla lilies, which go out slowly. Easter lilies are not so abundant, but if one can use short stems and small flowers there are quantities to be had at cheap prices.

The receipts of violets this week have been lighter, but they are piling up. Large quantities came in last week and sold well. St. Valentine's day made an exceptionally strong market for forty-eight hours. It cuts more and more figure every year. The violet is the special flower of the day and sold well, prices holding up until nearly all of the Hudson river receipts had been sold, but a small surplus developed Wednesday afternoon and Thursday morning. All other flowers felt the effect of the increased demand and wholesalers and retailers all were satisfied.

At this season of the year there always are flurries in green goods. Smilax had its turn Monday, but it always is possible to get greens in this market if the order is placed the day before. Common ferns are poor, both those coming out of storage and those received from the east. An advance in price has been made by the eastern shippers which has resulted in adding a notch to the price asked here.

Club Meeting.

At the largest and most enthusiastic meeting the Chicago Florists' Club has held in years August Poehlmann made a motion to invite the American Rose Society to hold its 1908 meeting here. It was carried by a rising vote.

It was carnation night, February 14, and the hall was crowded. Exhibits were numerous and most of them fine. The judges, W. N. Rudd, J. G. Hancock and F. F. Benthey, scored the new sorts as follows: Winsor, 88; May, 78; Snowdrift, 84; Red Riding Hood, 82; Imperial, 79; Pink Imperial, 84; Toreador, 85; Mabelle, 79; No. 20, 87. Without Mr. Rudd's assistance the other judges scored No. 16802a, 87 points. Certificates were awarded all scoring 85 or better.

A. T. Pyfer, H. Cheesman and Harry Manheim were elected to membership. J. F. Helbok was proposed. The resignations of W. A. Peterson and George Wienhoeber were accepted with regret.

Resolutions were adopted endorsing the proposed appropriation for greenhouses for experiment at the State University and P. J. Foley reported on the status of affairs at Springfield.

President Bruns inaugurated the less formal part of the proceedings with the remark that the club was fortunate in having present on St. Valentine's day, Mr. Valentine, of Denver. That widely traveled gentleman gave a brief account of what he had seen on his recent trip and concluded by saying that after visiting a number of the Chicago growers he had been more than ever impressed that a liberal education in the trade can be obtained right in this market. W. A. Kennedy, of Milwaukee, said that, not being able to go to Toronto he did the next best thing—came to the Chicago carnation show. Messrs. Rudd, Hauswirth, Pyfer, Poehlmann, Asmus and others had a few things to say and E. C. Amling, financial secretary, reported receipts of the evening $130.

The exhibits from out of town were as follows:

Winsor, from F. R. Pierson Co., staged by Jensen & Dekema, attracted the favorable comment of everyone. The flowers were shipped from Scarboro, N. Y., Monday and were in perfect condition Thursday night, more than three days later and nearly a thousand miles from home. The color fills a gap and is fine under artificial light. Several growers who had visited the Pierson place spoke highly of the habit of growth. It will be planted largely in the vicinity of Chicago next season.

H. Weber & Sons Co., Oakland, Md., sent Toreador, on the Prosperity order, and Mabelle, pink. Toreador is to be sent out next year and will be tried by most of the growers, for its color is needed. Both sorts traveled well.

J. E. Haines, Bethlehem, Pa., sent Imperial and Pink Imperial. There would be no steady sale for the former in this market, because of its peculiar variegation, but Pink Imperial pleases. Both sorts have magnificent stems.

R. Witterstaetter, Cincinnati, sent a good white, called Snowdrift, a large, round, full flower.

Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, sent May, flesh pink. It is too small.

The largest local exhibit was that of Poehlmann Bros. Co. It included Enchantress, Red Lawson, Lawson, Gov. Wolcott, Lieut. Peary, Craig, Variegated Lawson and White Lawson. The White Lawson and Red Lawson were especially good.

The Chicago Carnation Co. staged a splendid vase of Aristocrat, much better than was shown at Toronto; also 100 magnificent blooms of White Perfection and 100 good Red Riding Hood. This is not an exhibition sort but Mr. Pyfer says is a free bloomer. Their fine Enchantress were weak in stem, as in many other exhibits. Daybreak Lawson and Variegated Lawson completed their table.

J. A. Budlong had a table of up-to-date commercial varieties, including Cardinal, Lady Bountiful, Nelson Fisher, Enchantress, Lawson and White Lawson.

Jensen & Dekema had some good blooms of Boston Market, Victory, Mrs. Patten, Enchantress and Lady Bountiful.

Anton Then staged his variegated seedling, Winnemac; also Harlowarden, Enchantress, Mrs. E. A. Nelson, Lawson, White Lawson and Lady Bountiful. John Then is a chip off the old block.

Peter Reinberg had Enchantress, Lawson, Lady Bountiful and Robert Craig, all good commercial stock.

W. N. Rudd brought his red, No. 16802a, which has size, form and especially good color.

Bassett & Washburn set up a splendid vase of their red, No. 20. It is better than when shown at Toronto, where it won the large medal, and attracted as much comment as anything in the hall.

John Reardon brought red sport of Lawson which originated with him and which it has pleased his employer, M. A. Ryerson, to name for himself.

H. N. Bruns brought a bunch of fine valley.

E. F. Winterson is entitled to special mention for the work he did in providing vases, tables, etc., for so much stock.

Easter plants, with an address by J. S. Wilson, will be the feature of the March meeting.

The Winandy Sale.

Thursday, February 14, the referee in bankruptcy confirmed the sale of the Winandy equities and personal property to Arthur B. Dietsch on his bid of $4,500. Mr. Dietsch states that he will conduct the establishment until he can find a purchaser at a satisfactory price. The houses are now planted to lettuce and carnations and good crops are said to be in sight for spring.

One of the trustees states that the purchase price will not cover the costs which have accrued since the petition in bankruptcy was filed. He states that outstanding accounts of the trustees must be scaled ten to fifteen per cent and possibly more.

The Hartshorne Fund.

At the club meeting last week P. J. Hauswirth reported that the Hartshorne benefit fund now amounts to $1,250 or $1,300. Of this $325 was subscribed at the time of the S. A. F. convention; $500 was realized from the flower booth at the last Chicago show. At Toronto J. A. Valentine brought up the subject and C. W. Ward gave his check for $100. W. S. Kasting took the matter up then and there and secured $275.

While this is quite a sum, Mrs. Hartshorne is left with five children, the eldest 11 years of age. Others who would like to contribute may send their checks to P. J. Hauswirth, 13 Congress street. It is hoped to secure enough to invest so that Mrs. Hartshorne will have a regular income from it.

Various Notes.

Anton Then is at Magnolia Springs, Ala., in the hope of benefiting his health through the medicinal waters there. He was in a bad way just before the holidays, and will be absent until toward Easter.

W. L. Kroeschell, of the Kroeschell Bros. Co., attended the convention of the Society of Southern Florists at New Orleans last week.

P. J. Hauswirth will be one of the judges at the exhibition of the American Rose Society in Washington, March 13 to 15.

J. S. Dekema is now located at Los Angeles and reports the climate benefiting his health materially.

J. C. Bruchner has removed from 35 Monroe street to 639 West Sixty-ninth street, where he has a large store in a good neighborhood.

The Foley Mfg. Co. is experiencing some of the troubles of the car shortage. They were held up six or eight weeks in getting the heavy timbers for the new factory. They do not now expect to be moved to the new location before some time in April.

Friday, February 22, is a legal holiday, with but one mail delivery. Wire your orders.

P. Broadbeck, at Evanston, has had a light cut of roses this season partly because he put in cement benches last summer and did not get replanted until September. He has consigned to the Kennicott Bros. Co. steadily for fourteen years.

Miss Nina M. Howard, the violet grower at Glencoe, in common with others has had crops below normal this season. She is retailing her flowers this season.

Theodore Fehrmann, of Niles Center, is busy erecting greenhouses on the lots recently purchased in Irving Park and shortly will remove there.

The marriage of Matilda Graff and Herman Landfield will take place at the Unity club, Thirty-first street and Indiana avenue, Sunday afternoon. The bride is the sister of Will and Sam Graff, who do a prosperous business at Columbus. Both are here to attend the wedding, Will having brought his family. Sam Graff will be best man and his sister, Emma, maid of honor. The floral decorations will be worthy of special notice.

Sweet peas are one of the items which are not in large receipt, for not many growers are yet ready to cut, but E. C. Amling has had pink and white for several weeks. He expects other colors soon.

Percy Jones notes that whereas Desplaines is no longer able to produce violets of a quality to be profitable, Park Ridge growers do well with them.

At J. A. Budlong's they are grafting quite a lot of roses for next season. Grafted stock has done well this year and now is looking fine.

Weiland & Risch say that although roses are now plentiful Killarney is holding its own.

E. F. Winterson says the volume of sales is all right but he hates to see prices go all to pieces the first time this year the growers really have anything to sell.

Zech & Mann say shipping trade is holding up well in spite of reports of large supplies in other cities to which they ship.

John Poehlmann, of Poehlmann Bros. Co., says that it will not be long before Beauties will join the procession in quantity. Antirrhinum is a specialty with them this week.

Joseph Foerster, sales manager for George Reinberg, says Lent has not affected demand to any appreciable extent but that evidently the out-of-town growers, as well as those here, are cutting heavier than they were, calls running largely to special items.

John Muno says he has had splendid results this season in rooting carnation cuttings. When he started in the business, twenty years or so ago, he did not know how to make a rose cutting, but when P. Blameuser showed him he rooted ninety-five per cent of Mermet his first season.

Michael Fink has sold his business, at 2211 Cottage Grove avenue, to Albert Klitz, who takes possession at once. Joe Phillips will continue in the place as Mr. Klitz's assistant. Mr. Fink will move to the north side and assist his father in the Herndon street store.

The dealers in rooted cuttings report an average demand, with little call for the common sorts of carnations, but a demand for Enchantress which is something phenomenal. With more Enchantress in the market than any other variety, it looks as though all the growers were increasing their plantings for next year. A. C. Spencer, of Peter Reinberg's, says Lawson also is selling well with them and Nelson Fisher in better demand than ever. N. J. Wietor, of Wietor Bros., reports an exceptional call for Lady Bountiful.

O. P. Bassett has cabled the safe arrival of Mrs. Bassett and himself in Europe. C. L. Washburn was at Madison Monday evening visiting his son.

Vaughan & Sperry report that Wednesday, February 13, was the best business day the firm ever has experienced, except the day before Christmas, 1906.

Charles Dressler, of Wietor Bros.' city staff, is doing jury service this week.

The A. L. Randall Co. reports having handled 277,500 violets last week, most of them Monday and Wednesday before St. Valentine's day.

C. M. Dickinson, manager at E. H. Hunt's, says the call for bone meal and sheep manure is breaking all records this season.

Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Pollworth, of Milwaukee, came down Saturday to spend a few days with friends here.

Those who went to the State Florists' Association's meeting at Bloomington Tuesday morning were: George Keller, August Poehlmann, J. S. Wilson, George Asmus, H. Hasselbring, P. J. Hauswirth, J. P. Foley, W. N. Rudd, L. H. Winterson, C. S. Stewart, F. J. Hartwick, and H. C. Lenington.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

J. Horn & Bro., of Allentown, Pa., are strong advocates of cement benches with walls about two feet high, plenty of drainage and ventilation. All their carnations are grown in this manner and give even better returns than when grown in the old way.

Ernest Ashley, of Allentown, has a neat little store downtown and says it keeps all hands busy between the two places.

Thomas Love, of Bethlehem, Pa., has the annual order to decorate the churches here at Easter and is preparing a batch of flowering stock for the purpose.

The lily question will be a problem from now on and an unknown quantity for Easter. William Walke, of Salem, Mass., has a fine, but irregular, batch. The only true stock seems to be giganteum and candidum.

Thomas Roland, at Nahant, William Edgar, at Waverley, and A. Leuthy, at Roslindale, are carrying choice lots of flowering plants for the Easter market. Lilies will be scarce in many localities.

Fred Vetter, grower at the Hoffman place, at Mount Auburn, pointed out some multiflorums that have stem-rot; it shows as a dark ring above the surface of the soil, becoming hard and finally causes the plant to drop over. Many are affected this way, apparently quite healthy otherwise. This is the first time he has noticed it. Harrisii generally seem freer from disease than of late years, but the number of blooms seems to be getting more beautifully less.

McGee, Geary & Co., of Salem, report an increasing demand for old-fashioned flowers, something different from the stereotyped roses and carnations. The scarcity of these staples has afforded the opportunity to push bulbous stock, which has helped wonderfully this season.

J. M. Ward, of Salem, is much interested in tne Imperial carnation and, as he is a most successful grower, it will stand an excellent chance. Fisher's Beacon has a big reputation here.

M. B. Bunker, also of Salem, was putting the finishing touches to a handsome wreath, composed of bronze galax leaves studded with short-stemmed Beauty and valley. A bunch of pansies carelessly arranged on the left-hand side gave it a choice effect.

Chatterton Warburton, of Fall River, placed a big order for the new carnation, Winsor, when in Toronto. We met Mr. Cruickshank, of Rennie & Thomson, who reported very satisfactory business for the new house.

With the increase in values of real estate Fred Becker, of Cambridge, has for some time had under advisement the pulling down of his plant and building an up-to-date store with a showhouse. Retail business has increased rapidly. At one time Mr. Becker did the banner wholesale trade of this section and will be remembered as the boomer of the well-famed Nephrolepis Bostoniensis, which he justly claims has merit that will keep it at the head of all rivals.

Dan Murphy, of W. E. Doyle's of Cambridge, says there is going to be a big scarcity of geraniums this season. Prospective stocks are low and the outlook for bedding plants is large. Cannas will be a feature and to some extent will help out the shortage. W. M.

Roses and Carnations A Specialty..... WHOLESALE GROWER of CUT FLOWERS

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business last week was reported good. St. Valentine's day was much better than last year. The first few days of Lent have had some effect on business. Stock is coming in more freely than it has for some time, and the local trade is looking for a big glut in almost everything by the end of the week, and especially if the fine, warm weather continues.

Roses have been scarce for six weeks, but now are arriving in large lots and prices are down; fancy stock brings $8 to $10 per hundred. There are none too many extra long Beauties; plenty of other grades, but mostly deformed.

Carnations sell well and quantities of fine blooms are coming in every morning. The prices Monday morning were still high, but we look for a big crop by the end of the week. More Enchantress than any of the others are coming in. All wholesale houses are loaded with them. Violets, too, are arriving in increased quantities and the price on them already is down to 40 cents per hundred.

A fine lot of bulbous stock is coming in of late. The price on these is as usual at this time of the year. Not many Harrisii are coming.

Beauties, Richmond, Maids, Brides, Uncle John, Chatenay, Killarney, Liberty, Carnations and an abundant supply of everything at the lowest market price. We should appreciate YOUR Order.

Club Meeting.

The carnation meeting of the Florists' Club, held Thursday afternoon, February 14, was one of the largest attended in many months. The carnations were numerous and many extra fine blooms were exhibited by our local growers, as well as outsiders. The exhibitors from outside were H. Weber & Son, Oakland, Md., a fine vase of Mabelle; F. R. Pierson, Tarrytown, N. Y., a large vase of Winsor; Baur & Smith, Indianapolis, Ind., a vase of their new light pink, May; Chicago Carnation Co., Joliet, Ill., Aristocrat; John E. Haines, Bethlehem, Pa., John E. Haines and Pink Imperial. A. C. Brown, Springfield, Ill., was present and looked after his fine exhibition of seedlings, which attracted a great deal of attention. J. F. Ammann, Edwardsville, had Lady Bountiful, Enchantress, Mrs. Patten and Lawson. Henry Johan, Collinsville, Ill., had two fine vases of Enchantress and Cardinal.

Among the local growers John Steidle exhibited Rose-pink Enchantress, Nelson Fisher, Cardinal, Mrs. Patten and Lady Bountiful. A. Jablonsky staged Robert Craig, Enchantress, Aristocrat, White Perfection, Mrs. Patten, Rose-pink Enchantress and Lady Bountiful. Mr. Braun, foreman for Adolph Brix, staged a fine vase of Mrs. Lawson. William Winter showed fine vases of Cardinal and Lady Bountiful. The Oakland Floral Co., Kirkwood, a vase of Enchantress and Mrs. Lawson.

The meeting was called to order by President Irish, with all the officers and sixty members present. Chairman F. A. Weber, of the flower show committee, made a lengthy report and ended by saying that, owing to the divided opinion on this proposition, the committee advised the club to drop the subject of a flower show, and the club so voted. Pierre Schneider, of the Oakland Floral Co., Kirkwood, and Henry Niemeyer, also of Kirkwood, were elected to membership. The club voted to subscribe $100 to the National Flower Show to be held in Chicago in 1908. J. F. Ammann, president of the Illinois State Florists' Association, invited the members to attend the second annual meeting February 19 and 20, at Bloomington, Ill.

The chair appointed A. C. Brown, F. J. Fillmore and F. C. Weber to act as judges on carnations. The decisions were as follows:

Twenty-five red, Wm. Winter first, Cardinal; John Steidle second, also Cardinal; A. Jablonsky third, with Robert Craig.

Twenty-five light pink, Oakland Floral Co. first; A. Jablonsky second, both with Enchantress.

Twenty-five rose-pink, John Steidle, first; A. Jablonsky, second, both on Rose-pink Enchantress.

Aristocrat scored 90 points; Winsor, 86; Mabelle, 74; John E. Haines, 76. Pink Imperial was too far gone to be judged. Gov. Deneen, sent by A. C. Brown, scored 65 points. The White Enchantress, sent by E. Schraeder, of Richmond Burough, N. Y., were frozen in transit and could not be staged.

Twenty-five dark pink, Oakland Floral Co. first, with Mrs. Lawson; A. Jablonsky second, with Aristocrat.

Twenty-five variegated, A. Jablonsky first, and John Steidle second, both with Mrs. Patten.

The chairman called on several of the visitors for remarks. A. C. Brown in his talk made well pointed remarks. Luther Armstrong, one of the charter members of the club and its first secretary, was present and told us how the club was organized twenty years ago. A. S. Halstead and J. F. Ammann also made a few remarks for the good of the club. The question box brought out a good discussion.

W. C. Smith, chairman of the trustees, acted as auctioneer and sold the prize-winners at a good price. The next meeting is March 14 at 2 o'clock.

Various Notes.

E. W. Guy, of Belleville, is visiting his father, at St. James, Mo., who is very ill.

The Oakland Floral Co., at Kirkwood, is sending in fine carnations to C. A. Kuehn.

Henry Emunds, of Belleville, was over on Saturday, buying supplies for several large orders to be filled early this week.

Jules Bourdet, at Vandeventer and Shaw avenues, has a fine lot of blooming plants for Easter.

L. A. Barnett, representing Reed & Keller, New York, spent several days here last week.

Beyer Bros. are making preparations for an extra fine lot of blooming plants for Easter. Carl Beyer has been so busy of late that he failed to attend the club meetings.

William Winter, of Kirkwood, is cutting extra fine quality of carnations and violets.

Martin Moran, late with the Forest park greenhouses, is now with Mrs. M. M. Ayers on Grand avenue.

The St. Louis Horticultural Society will hold its regular monthly meeting this week. A report of the exhibition committee will be heard and preparation will be completed for the spring flower show, to be held March 5 to 7, in the Odeon building on Grand avenue.

BOSTON.

The Market.

We have had some let-up in wintry conditions and the milder weather has considerably increased the supply of flowers. Business, however, for Lent, remains quite good. Valentine's day saw a strong demand for violets and the market generally was good. American Beauties remain up to top notch figures and are still scarce, especially the better grades. Richmond meets a good sale at slightly lower prices. While more Bride, Maid, Wellesley, Killarney and other sorts are coming in and prices have weakened a little, there has been as yet no surplus.

Violets are arriving in heavy quantities, but have sold fairly well, singles, as usual, taking the lead. Sweet peas bring an average of $1 per hundred. Carnations are more plentiful and rather lower. The quality of these is extra good at present. The increased amount of sunlight has improved the stems.

Golden Spur narcissi make $3 per hundred, double Von Sions $2. Tulips keep about the same. Callas and Easter lilies are rather more plentiful. Hyacinths make 75 cents and $1 per dozen stalks, but are not in much demand. Some nice mignonette, English primroses and antirrhinum are coming in. Valley is of fine quality and meets with a steady sale. In orchids, cattleyas are growing scarce. Dendrobiums nobile and Wardianum and Cœlogyne cristata are, however, in good supply.

Club Meeting.

The meeting of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club at Horticultural hall again drew a big attendance February 19, about 150 being present. The executive committee met many growers who use steam heat prior to the regular meeting and discussed the threatened legislation. The club unanimously voted to oppose the proposed legislation, as it will affect florists and market gardeners, and a committee of prominent men with F. E. Palmer as chairman was appointed to attend the sessions at the state house and give evidence before the committees if necessary. It was announced that the Boston Market Gardeners' Association has appointed a committee to oppose the proposed legislation.

Charles W. Ross, of Newton, the lecturer of the evening, was unable to attend, but sent an interesting and practical paper on "Road Construction," read by James Morton Strong, which the members greatly enjoyed. A good discussion followed. The membership was further swollen by the addition of eleven new members. It was announced that at the next meeting carnations will be the subject, with a specialist as lecturer. The landscape classes, it was stated, are making excellent headway and members are now engaged in drawing plans.

There was an unsually fine lot of exhibits, as follows:

Beacon and Evangeline carnations, from Peter Fisher; several vases of carnations and Violet Boston from S. J. Goddard, also some grand sweet peas which received a report of superior merit for culture; several cattleyas and four varieties of coelogyne from W. N. Craig, fine Harlowarden carnations from Mrs. Snow; seedling carnations from H. A. Stevens Co.; Begonia Erfordii from Thomas Westwood; Primula Kewensis from Thomas Coles received a report of superior merit.

President Westwood appointed the following committee on exhibits for the year: Kenneth Finlayson, George Anderson, George C. Harbison, David Lumsden, H. A. Stevens, Mr. Mitchell, A. H. Fewkes, J. W. Duncan, Peter Fisher, R. T. McGorum.

A committee consisting of W. N. Craig, John Farquhar and J. W. Duncan was appointed to prepare resolutions on the death of Mrs. Wm. R. Nicholson, Jr., Framingham, which occurred February 19, after a short illness. Much sympathy is felt. The couple had been married only a year.

Refreshments were served as usual, and it was quite late ere the meeting closed.

Various Notes.

About a dozen members of the Gardeners' and Florists' Club attended the annual banquet of the North Shore Horticultural Society at Manchester February 15 and reported a delightful time.

William H. Elliott is on a visit to the West Indies. At present he is in Cuba, but hopes to return in good season for the meeting of the American Rose Society in Washington.

We find that the late George A. Sutherland was an employee of W. J. Stewart, but not a partner, as stated in last week's notes.

The annual spring exhibition of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society will occur March 22 to 24 and promises to be an unusually attractive one.

The lecture at Horticultural hall February 16 was by Miss Anne Withington on "Some Aspects of School Gardening." In the discussion which followed Robert Cameron spoke interestingly on the practical horticultural education afforded children in Jamaica, which he considers much in advance of anything we have in the United States.

William C. Ward, as usual at this season, is marketing pansies of unusually good quality in large quantities. He has also some extra fine sweet peas.

John Barr, of South Natick, while devoting most of his greenhouse space to carnations, has produced some hundreds of very fine cyclamens, in the culture of which he is a past master.

Few finer violets than those of William Spillsbury, of Woburn, are seen in the market this season. He grows Princess of Wales exclusively and finds nothing to beat it.

John McFarland has a fine house of Brunner roses which he will start cutting from in a day or two. He is one of the few growers of hybrid roses for the Boston market.

Morris Hambro, late in the flower department at Houghton & Dutton's, will open a store on School street.

L. H. Fellows, of Hyde Park, a prominent mushroom specialist, is on a visit to Michigan, mushroom spawn selling being his objective. Mr. Fellows has made a good deal of spawn and has great success from its use in his houses.

Windows of dendrobiums in Galvin's Tremont street store were features last week.

Peirce Bros. will have a larger and finer lot of lilies than ever the coming Easter. The plants are in just the right stage.

W. W. Rawson & Co. are experiencing a heavy call for dahlias this season, in which they are now leading specialists. Their manager, Maurice Fuld, is secretary of the New England Dahlia Society.

PHILADELPHIA.

The Rising Eastern Market.

It is a buyer's market, with prices receding on all but two or three of the scarcer varieties of flowers. The greatest fall in prices has been on bulbous flowers, which are extremely fine and very plentiful. Buyers who could use these in thousand lots obtained the lowest prices of the season, and the average returns to the growers will be lower than usual at this time of year. Some of the buyers have taken advantage of these conditions to use great quantities of Golden Spur, offering them at tempting prices that were little if any above the normal wholesale rates. Carnations are also much lower than before Lent, the principal decline being on fancy grades. Tea roses, too, are much more plentiful, with prices ruling lower. The other declines most marked are in calla lilies and violets; the latter sold remarkably well up to Ash Wednesday, but since then have receded in price. The strong features of the list are Beauties, the fancy grades still so scarce that they command extraordinary Lenten prices; cattleyas, which have advanced slightly, and greens, smilax and Adiantum Croweanum being in remarkably brisk demand. Returning to St. Valentine's, business taken as a whole was disappointing. Myosotis, however, sold extraordinarily well, the prices realized being the highest ever recorded, several thousand sprays realizing from $2.50 to $4 per hundred. Indications point to still further declines in several varieties of flowers before normal conditions are reëstablished.

Mr. Stokes' Latest Importation.

Walter P. Stokes, the popular and successful head of the S. S. S., which you can read either as Stokes' Seed Store or Stokes' Standard Seeds, according to the position in which it stands, has just received a new and very interesting importation in the shape of a box of raffiatape, which appears to be an improvement on the common raffia used so extensively for tying plants. Raffiatape is corrugated, colored green and Mr. Stokes says is cheaper than raffia. It is put up very neatly and so arranged that it may be either used by fastening the reel in the buttonhole or in coils to be put in the pocket. Better see Mr. Stokes about this raffiatape before you tie your lilies.

Various Notes.

Paul Berkowitz, of the firm of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., returned on Monday from a four weeks' trip, which he describes as "extremely cold," though his business friends greeted him most warmly. Businessly speaking, it was the most successful trip the congenial Mr. Berkowitz has ever enjoyed.

W. J. Sherry, of the Johnson Seed Co., reports an excellent mail demand for all varieties of seeds. The company's store is a very busy place just now.

Robert Craig will be one of the judges at the American Rose Society's exhibition at Washington next month.

Walter P. Stokes is delighted with his new truss houses, which stood the great weight of snow without the slightest difficulty.

Answers to Correspondents.

Review readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia, to Phil. in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

70.—Is Philadelphia a good market for field-grown asters which would be three weeks earlier than those grown near Philadelphia?

Ans.—Yes.

71.—What varieties are most profitable?

Ans.—I would suggest Queen of the Market for early, and Semple's for late.

72.—What color would bring most money?

Ans.—White.

73.—If variety of color, what proportion of each color should be used?

Ans.—Try one-third white, and one-sixth each of lavender, purple, pink and red.

74.—What prices usually rule, and what length stems?

Ans.—From 50 cents to $1.50 a hundred; occasionally $2 for fancy stock, when in demand. The length of stem is usually from twelve to eighteen inches.

75.—Would field-grown longiflorum or Harrisii lilies find ready sale, and at what price per flower or stalk?

Ans.—I would not consider these as particularly good risks, owing to their being easily bruised. The price per flower, when sold, would probably be from $3 to $5 per hundred. PHIL.

The Market.

Fine bright weather is working wonders in the way of bringing out the quality and quantity of flowers. There has been a marked improvement during the last week. Roses are showing up the best, with carnations a close second. While the supply has not increased greatly still it is possible to take good care of all orders without much trouble. Bulbous stock is still doing first-rate. Other varieties of flowers are in good supply and going nicely. Violets are none too plentiful.

does, especially at the beginning of it. It would seem that the people take on themselves a special degree of piety during the first weeks of lent, but the pressure is too great and it usually wears off after a couple of weeks and then business begins to move about as usual. The fact that flowers are not overplentiful has taken away what depressing effect the beginning of Lent usually brings. The great amount of funeral work has also helped things greatly.

Paul Berkowitz was a caller.

The Greenhouse Structural Co. has leased the building in 840 West Fourth street. The building is a two-story structure on a lot 22x88 feet to an alley. The annual rental is $480.

Robert Boeck, 61 years old, whose greenhouses are in Hyde Park, was thrown down and dragged by his horse. He was badly cut up and one leg was so seriously injured that the bone protruded through the flesh. With remarkable fortitude he crawled around until he found two pieces of lumber, that he used as crutches, and hobbled back to the house. Dr. Arthur Brown and another surgeon were called and they declared the old man's feat in floundering home on the two boards, with both legs mangled, was one of the most remarkable displays of fortitude which had ever come under their notice. They found him calmly smoking his pipe in bed, with his pet dogs near.

PLANT FOR NAME.

I enclose a small plant. Can you tell me if it belongs to, or is a fern? If so, please give name and class. We are somewhat divided in opinion and want the opinion of one versed in such.

L. A.

The specimen received is one of the selaginellas, a genus closely allied to the mosses and embracing several hundred varieties. As near as we can determine, the specimen being somewhat withered, this species is the old and well-known Selaginella denticulata, which succeeds well under benches or in any damp and shady location under glass. In sunshine the plant turns more ruddy in appearance. The variety S. uncinata, or cæsia, is of a metallic blue color, forming trailing shoots one and a half to two feet long and makes a pretty basket plant.

The Market.

Winter's reign continues, with intervals of springlike temperature. For instance, Sunday was warm and sunny. At midnight the temperature had fallen 30 degrees and Monday was back to frost. Easter is only five weeks away. The auctioneer oiling his pipes for an early March sale and the busy seedsmen are all consoling features, for they are sure harbingers of the merry springtime.

The sun last week did effective work. We hear of no shortage of anything; in fact, shipments were heavy and prices much lower as last week drew to a close. Saturday evening, the day of large deliveries and market cleaning, saw no improvement. Like the inevitable January thaw came the February slump and now values have resumed their normal state and are back to the plane of other years at this season. The supply this week will be large. The quality of everything is superb and if the general retail business will show some snap and life all will be well.

There are plenty of balls, weddings and funerals. One retailer had three balls in a single day, a rather significant number, but not an insignificant achievement. Then, too, according to the man who knows Wall street, the market there is more cheerful and prices are advancing, so the flower market should demonstrate elation without delay. Nobody seems to notice Lent. Why flowers and pure and undefiled religion should not go hand in hand it would take the man who quotes from Genesis or one of the old and wornout prophets to explain.

Beauties do not go above $9 per dozen these days, many of the best at $5 a dozen. Brides and Maids are down to $12 per hundred for the finest. Thousands are closed out at $10 and so on down to $2 for No. 2. The novelties, as they still class Killarney, Richmond and Chatenay, also felt the general trend.

Carnations suffered most of all. Great quantities of the best Enchantress, and there seems to be more of these than any other variety, sold at $4. Lawsons were to be had at $2 and ordinary stock of all kinds sold at times as low as $10 a thousand.

Valley could be had in quantities at $1 and $2. A few brought $3. Jos. Fenrich handles large quantities daily from Anton Schultheis, of College Point.

When the street merchants have violets, and good ones, at "twenty-five a bunch," ribbons and perfume included, you can imagine how many surplus boxes are arriving daily. Even the choicest in 100-bunch selections did not reach $1. Violets sold as low as 20 cents last week and carnations at 50 cents per hundred. Orchids hold steady, thanks to out-of-town demands in addition to a city trade that now is stable and growing universal. A florist here who does not handle orchids is behind the procession and is likely to stay there.

Tulips are a drug; too many altogether for comfort. Lots of them unsalable. Narcissi are quite as abundant, making windows wonderfully springlike at small cost. There is no excuse for stinted display or wisdom in carelessness as to daily redecoration of the retail windows.

Various Notes.

Fred Breitmeyer, of Detroit, was a visitor February 16 and under the care of Frank Traendly seemed quite at home in the wholesale district. He tells me La Detroit is queen of the pink roses in his city and Bridesmaids are not called for. He promises a fine exhibit at the Washington rose show.

Myer is having a busy season at 609 Madison avenue, and has had many notable weddings since the new year began. The daily New York papers have itemized his artistic work and given him much praise for unique and beautiful effects. The last wedding of note was the Morgan-Pruyn decoration a week ago, where laurel and bay trees were used extensively and originally to the satisfaction of all concerned. Myer is rapid in his progress and has a finely decorated store, quite up-to-date in every way.

Alex McConnell has issued a neat pamphlet entitled "How to Cultivate and Care for Decorative Plants for Adornment of Your City and Suburban Homes." It is a complete condensation of instruction that cannot fail to be of practical service to his customers. Every retailer might well copy this plan of generous advertising. A visit to Mr. McConnell's big store in the Arcade makes one forget the snow and winter. With its forsythia, lilac, snowballs and hyacinths, it is a breath of the spring.

Jas. T. Gillespie, formerly superintendent of the Geo. Gould estate, at Lakewood, is now in charge of Belle Terre, a 1,500-acre tract of land at Port Jefferson, L. I.

A visit to the nurseries of Bobbink & Atkins shows that a great supply of Easter blooming plants will be ready on time, including lilies of splendid promise and quantity.

The new houses of the Julius Roehrs Co., built for orchids, are completely filled and profusely blooming. There are six of them, thoroughly up-to-date, built to last a century, with tile benches and every modern improvement. A large packing shed adjoins the range and ample provision has been made for steady yearly additions to the plant. The company has recently bought a large tract of land adjoining its property for further expansion.

February 15, under the guidance of Mr. Ross, of the F. R. Pierson Co., a dozen Jersey and Long Island gardeners visited the Scarboro plant of this firm and enjoyed the hospitality of the house at a Tarrytown dinner.

Charles Schenck, of Traendly & Schenck, was married last Tuesday evening to Miss E. Pachner, of this city, the ceremony taking place in Tuxedo hall, which was elaborately decorated for the occasion by Warendorff. The honeymoon was spent in the south and the best wishes of the trade are extended to the happy couple.

The Bloomingdale's floral department, under the superintendency of Mr. Burnham, will add several thousand square feet of glass this spring, making this plant the largest roof garden of its kind on the continent.

At Bridgman's the Rickards brothers are already heels over head in spring orders.

O. V. Zangen, the Hoboken seedsman, reports an early call for all his specialties and a great outlook for the seed trade this season. The voice of the suburbanite is already sounding clear and strong.

As to the Easter plant trade in the city, Chas. Millang is already clearing the decks for action. His conservatories are always filled with the best in the market and he thinks five weeks are all too short in which to prepare for the coming avalanche of orders.

J. K. Allen's 6 o'clock stunt is growing easier every morning, as the days grow longer, but winter and summer make no change in his early devotions. He boasts a record of never having kept a grower waiting for his check every Tuesday for nearly twenty years.

Jas. Hart, the veteran, has been under the weather with grip. Like the rest of them he is preparing for a big plant Easter and has a large enough store to make this a successful adjunct to his cut flower trade.

H. E. Froment reports a trade quite the equal of last year's aggregate to date, with stock more abundant and of better quality than at any time since Christmas, especially in roses, of which he has a large supply.

W. H. Donohoe has one of the biggest weddings in his experience this week, using quantities of American Beauties in the decoration. Mr. Donohoe has fully recovered from his recent illness.

David Clarke's Sons say the season has exceeded all years to date and have forgotten what a dull day means.

Young & Nugent, on West Twenty-eighth street, are at all times careful of unique window decoration, enhanced at night by novel lighting effects.

forget that Saturday evening, February 23, at 7:30, the great annual reunion of the New York Florists' Club takes place, at the St. Denis hotel, and that in addition to dinner, wine and song, one of the prominent after-dinner orators of the country will be present to give tone and eclat to the occasion. The mystery as to the selection and whether the orator be Robert Craig, Chauncey Depew, Delmas, of California, Gurney Hill, or Luther Burbank, must remain in doubt until President Totty sees fit to reveal it. Patrick O'Mara will serve the toast, as usual. There would seem to be no good reason why every one of the 250 club members should not attend. These annual reunions are so attractive that absence from them seems inexplicable.

NEW ENGLAND DAHLIA SOCIETY.

The secretary of the New England Dahlia Society reports that the membership is constantly increasing and that the society has now so well progressed that the executive committee at the last meeting decided to issue a monthly bulletin beginning with March, which shall be called the Dahlia News. It will contain each month at least one article by some renowned grower of dahlias, on their cultivation or their peculiarities. It will also contain the dahlia news of the world, inform the members what is going on, give descriptions of the new varieties that are introduced and, in general, supply the information that the dahlia growers are looking for.

The last page of this paper is given up to advertising and returns for the same are expected to pay for the cost of publishing. We feel that the society will out-rival in membership any of the others of the same nature in this country or Europe, as we expect a membership of fully 1,000 by the end of the year. We have now members residing in every state in the Union and the interest given to the dahlia at large is surprising.

The secretary of the New England Dahlia Society would appreciate it if the secretaries of the different horticultural societies would inform him of the dates of their shows, where dahlias are included, so the members may be informed of it and exhibit wherever and whenever possible.

All growers of dahlias should join the society at once in order to get the benefit which a membership will give.

Maurice Fuld, Sec'y.

MOLINE, ILL.

The Tri-City Florists' Club met February 14 with William Knees, at his new greenhouses. An enjoyable meeting, both from a business standpoint and socially, was held. F. W. Gardner, of Ionia, Mich., representative of the Ionia Pottery Co., was present. Mr. Knees' new greenhouses, which have just been completed and are now ready to be used for early spring plants, were inspected. The topic that came up for discussion at the business session was "Hotbeds, and the Best Plants to Raise in Them." A lengthy discussion of the subject took place.

Ed Patton, who has charge of the greenhouses of Mrs. Waltmann in the western part of the city, gave a farewell talk, intending to leave for California March 1, taking up new work.

The Tri-City Florists' Club is planning for a banquet, to be made an annual affair. It will be held at the St. James hotel, and will probably take place some time in March. The arrangements are in the hands of a committee consisting of Adolph Arp, of Davenport, William Knees, of Moline, and Ludwig Stapp, of Rock Island. A special meeting will be held at Fejervary park, February 28, and the report of the committee given.

A luncheon and refreshments were served by the host at the close of the meeting.

LOBELIA KATHLEEN MALLARD.

A European correspondent writes: "The American trade cannot do better than take up the new double lobelia, Kathleen Mallard. It is of the most intense azure blue and makes one of the most charming pot plants you can imagine, being absolutely one mass of bloom so as to completely cover all the foliage and, with a scarcity of fine blue plants suitable for pots, has proved one of the very best selling in England in 1906. Cuttings, struck in February in a warm house, potted on when rooted, grown in a temperature of 50 to 55 degrees and plenty of air, result in beautiful, compact little plants by May. It is just the thing for small fancy vases for table decoration and if kept pinched and potted on into 5-inch pots by June and July you will have something extra, and a ready seller."

Vegetable Forcing.

PLEASE, when you write to the REVIEW, give the names and addresses of some of those in your vicinity who grow vegetables under glass.

W. C. BECKERT, Allegheny, Pa., has a long red forcing radish which he calls Cincinnati Market because originally obtained from those who grew it for the purpose indicated.

THE man who grows fancy stock ought to trademark his cases; it will be worth money to him to have his stock easily distinguishable from the common run in wholesale markets.

THE Keene is a heading variety of lettuce which originated near Rochester, N. Y., and is used extensively in that locality, both for forcing and for early spring planting in the open. James Vicks's Sons say they think highly of it and that it is so early that it may be marketed weeks ahead of Boston Forcing and other popular market sorts.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 20.—Cucumbers, $1 to $1.50 doz.; leaf lettuce, 35c to 40c case; radishes, 40c to 45c per doz. bunches; mushrooms, 35c to 50c lb.

BOSTON, Feb. 18.—Cucumbers, $4 to $15 per box; tomatoes, 25c lb.; mushrooms, 50c to 75c lb.; lettuce, 25c to 75c doz.; dandelion, $1.25 to $1.50 box; radishes, 25c to 30c doz. bunches; rhubarb, 5c to 7c lb.; asparagus, $2.50 to $3 doz. bunches; escarolle, 75c to $1 doz.; mint, $1 doz. bunches; parsley, $1.50 to $2 box.

NEW YORK, Feb 19.—Mushrooms in moderate supply, but demand light and tone weak. Cucumbers firm at the recent advance. Lettuce shows poor quality and dragging, with most sales from 50c down. Mint shows further decline. Radishes held about steady. Rhubarb dull. Tomatoes in light supply. Cucumbers, 75c to $2.25 doz.; lettuce, 25c to 75c doz.; mushrooms, 35c to 65c lb.; radishes, $2 to $2.50 per hundred bunches; parsley, 12c to 15c doz. bunches; tomatoes, 15c to 30c lb.

STARTING VEGETABLE PLANTS

Pricking Off.

Previous to pricking off, the flats in which the plants are to be put should be got ready. In making them the grower will have to be governed by the class of trade he means to supply. If wholesale, it is immaterial what size the flats are, so long as they are of an easily handled size, as the plants will have to be taken from the flats for convenience in shipping. But with a local trade they generally take better as they stand in the flats. In this case it is better to have the flats just the size to hold a certain number.

Small flats could be constructed that would hold one dozen, others, a dozen and a half, and others, two dozen plants. A cheap, light box can be constructed of lath. A flat four laths wide, two laths deep and twelve inches long will accommodate one dozen plants. The laths can be spaced a little, which helps to add to the size. This is for tomatoes and plants of like size. The ends are made of ½-inch material, which gives something to nail to and makes a nice, stiff flat. For eighteen plants the flat can be increased in length and the same material will suit, but for larger flats than this heavier material is needed.

The time at which the plants are ready for pricking out will depend to a considerable extent on how thickly they have come up in the seed pans. If there is no danger of their becoming crowded and drawn by being too thick, it is all right to let them remain until they have made the first rough leaves. But should there be danger of crowding or drawing, they will have to be handled at an earlier stage, though there is always a larger percentage of loss when the plants are handled small, as the operation is more delicate and the plants more susceptible to injury.

The soil used should be of a free, rather light, nature with little or no manure. As a short, stocky growth is desired, an overrich soil should be avoided. A poor soil, however, would be benefited by the addition of some old, well-decomposed manure. The soil should be in a moderately moist condition, so that only a sprinkling is necessary after the plants are set. If a heavy watering were necessary the soil would be rendered too wet and heavy, which would considerably deter the starting of the little plants.

Shade from the direct rays of the sun should be provided for a few days following the setting out, as the little plants would wilt and suffer until they have had time to make fresh roots in their new quarters.

Vegetable plants are better divided into two divisions as regards the temperature in which they should be grown. Tomatoes, egg plants, peppers and plants of this class should be grown in a night temperature of 55 to 60 degrees, while cabbage, cauliflower, lettuce, etc., will make better plants if grown 10 degrees lower. We too often see them all grown in one house, where an intermediate temperature is maintained, with the result that none of them are doing really

Hothouse Specialties

Our Mr. Rawson being one of the largest growers of Vegetables under glass in this country, we have developed many special strains, including:

Rawson's Hothouse Cucumber

which we confidently believe superior to any other on the market; 60c per oz.; $1.50 per ¼-lb.; $5.00 per lb.

RAWSON'S SCARLET CONICAL RADISH

Best for forcing; many largest growers use it exclusively. Brilliant scarlet, conical, short-topped, remarkably uniform, tender, crisp; 90c lb.; 10 lbs., $8.00; 100 lbs., $75.00.

These and many other specialties fully described in our Market Gardener's List for 1907, just issued. Sent free on request.

well. They should be grown in separate houses, if possible; but if this cannot be done, there is usually a difference in temperature in the different ends of the house. So by putting the tenderest plants at the warm end and vice versa, they can be helped considerably.

As the season advances and the temperature rises it does not make such a great deal of difference, as the plants are then well under way, and if the conditions are a little adverse they are better able to stand it. The most critical time is the first few weeks after transplanting; so conditions should be made as favorable as possible for them during that time.

Watering must be judiciously done through the whole course of their growth, especially in the earlier stages. While the plants are still small and unable to absorb much moisture there is always danger of souring the soil if water is indiscriminately applied. Later, when the flats are full of roots, it is hard to overdo the watering, especially during bright weather; but care must be taken that they do not suffer from the want of it. W. S. Croydon.

STERILIZING LETTUCE SOIL.

I was reading about Eugene Davis' method of sterilizing lettuce soil. Would you kindly state what kind of system he uses? You say in your paper that he uses 1-inch pipe; but please state how far apart he puts the pipe. One pipe surely does not sterilize a bed sixteen feet wide and 150 feet long. When is the best time to do this, in the fall or just before you set out a crop of lettuce in the winter? We have been changing our soil every two or three years, but lately this has not done much good. We take out about three to four inches of soil. S. F. Co.

The pipes should be laid about three feet apart the whole length of the bed to insure thorough sterilization. It does not matter a great deal when the operation is done, but the nearer the time of planting, the better, as then you are sure that all insect and fungus life is destroyed when you do plant.

W. S. C.

AN ILLINOIS ESTABLISHMENT.

The vegetable-growing plant of George G. Whitcomb, Streator, Ill., has some interesting features. Besides the boiler-room and a packing house 20x50, there is a propagating house 12x90 and eight greenhouses, each 15x300. The steam heating plant was installed by Wood, Mulford & Co. and was completed a few weeks ago. It has been put to a severe test and has given entire satisfaction. During the recent cold spell, when the mercury was at zero and below, even when a stiff northwest wind was blowing, the temperature inside was easily kept at 80 degrees.

The two eighty-horsepower boilers are on the ground level. The system is high and low pressure, so that, while from twenty-five to sixty pounds pressure of steam may be carried on the boilers, the reducer limits the pressure on the pipes to from two to ten pounds. In the entire system, exclusive of the main header, which is 8-inch pipe, there are seven miles of 1¼-inch pipe. The steam, after coming through the reducers from the boilers, goes into the main header, which runs across the front of the entire establishment. At the end of each house is a trap. The steam as it condenses is forced through these traps into the returns under the buildings, and is carried back to a pump in the boiler room, where it is automatically pumped into the boilers again, thus keeping the heating pipes free from water.

The mechanical watering system is fed from a 1,000-gallon tank stationed above the boilers. These warm the water in the tanks by means of a coil connection, provision being made to let in cold water if need be to reduce the temperature. In this system there are 3,000 feet of galvanized iron pipe with small spray nozzles three feet apart in the pipe.

Cucumbers are to be the principal crop, but next season lettuce will precede the cucumbers and tomatoes also will be grown. The first crop is now going to the Chicago market and bringing good prices.

Fairhaven, Mass.—S. S. Peckham has sold out his retail business at New Bedford and has the intention of growing for the wholesale trade exclusively, at his place here.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—The firm of Nudd & Thomas has been dissolved, J. J. Nudd retiring. The business will be continued by G. A. Thomas under the name of the Thomas Greenhouse.

AMERICAN SEED TRADE ASSOCIATION.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 16th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

THE jobbing and wholesale trade is brisk.

VISITED SAN FRANCISCO:—Adam Currie, Jr., of Currie Bros. Co., Milwaukee.

THE market garden trade in the middle west has felt the impetus of a week of fine, springlike weather.

THERE is an inclination at Chicago to branch out and increase the onion set industry the coming season.

WHILE Montgomery Ward & Co. are trying to win a point against the ruling of the post-office, the catalogue is lying idle for weeks at the season when it should be getting in its best work.

THE C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee, issues a handsomely printed and illustrated bulb book for the trade, with blanks for the insertion of the price of each article in accordance with each customer's buying capacity. They used the same method last year and say the

NEW ORCHID-FLOWERED SWEET PEAS.

These are a distinct "break" in Sweet Peas, differing from the standard sorts by the extraordinary size of their flowers, usually measuring 2 inches across, and by the standards being crinkled and wavy, while the wings are large and spreading. Another splendid feature is that a very large percentage bear four blossoms to the stem, which are long and strong.

COUNTESS SPENCER. A lovely clear pink, shading darker at the edges. 10c per oz.; 25c per ¼-lb.; 75c per lb.

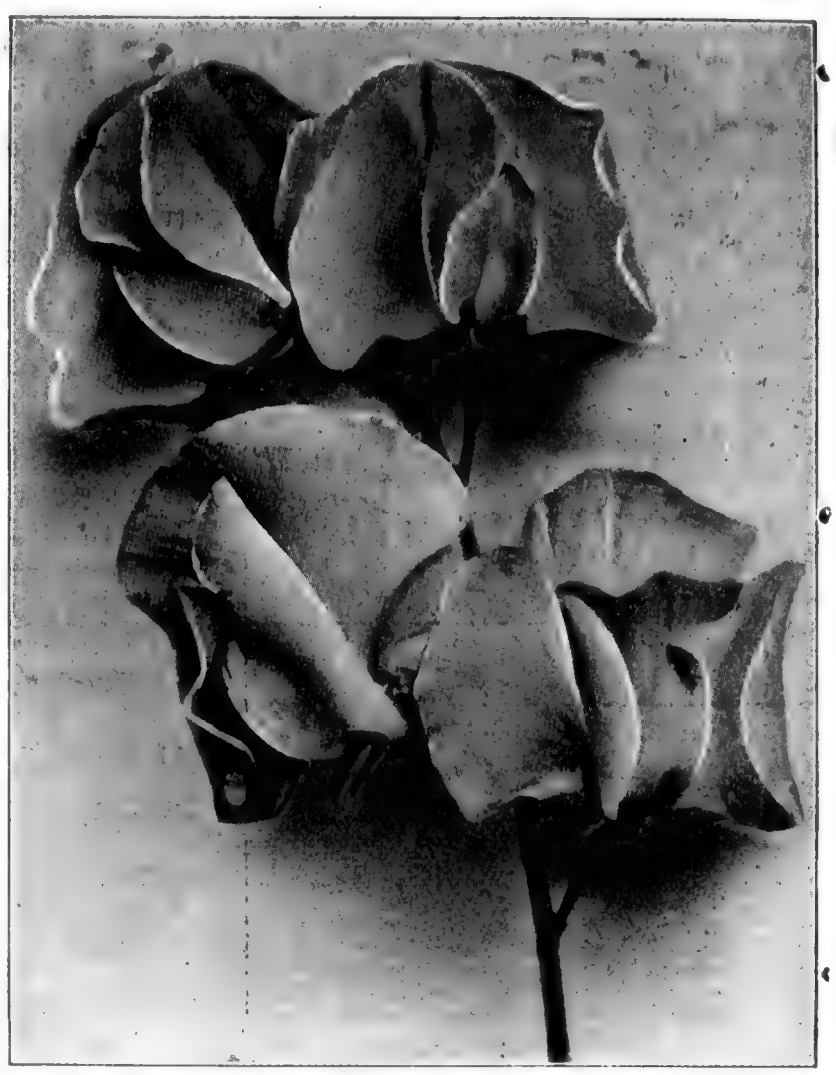
E. J. CASTLE. Rich carmine-rose, shaded with salmon, very striking, especially under artificial light. 17c per pkt., 5 pkts., 75c.

FRANK DOLBY. The largest and finest pale lavender-blue. 17c per pkt.; 5 pkts., 75c.

GLADYS UNWIN. Charming shade of pale rose-pink; extra long stems and very valuable for cutting. 10c per oz.; 25c per ¼-lb.; 75c per lb.

HELEN LEWIS. (Orange Countess.) Brilliant orange-rose. 25c per oz.

HELEN PIERCE. This is the new gloxinia-flowered Sweet Pea, being marbled blue on a white ground, with the veins showing a little deeper, exactly like a mottled Gloxinia. 15c per oz.; 50c per ¼-lb.



JOHN INGMAN. Rich salmon-rose. 15c per oz.; 50c per ¼-lb.

MRS. ALFRED WATKINS. A superb pale pink, similar in shade to the old Princess Beatrice. 17c per pkt.; 5 pkts., 75c.

NORA UNWIN. The finest white now in existence. 17c per pkt.; 5 pkts., 75c.

PHYLLIS UNWIN. A veritable giant among Sweet Peas; color a deep rose-carmine. 15c per oz.; 50c per ¼-lb.

results amply compensated for the clerical work required.

AN exceptional number of inquiries for onion sets are reported at Chicago.

C. L. ALLEN, the Long Island cabbage seed grower, is represented on the road by a grandson, who is now calling on the trade in the west.

VISITED LAWRENCE, KAN.:—Chas. P. Braslan, San Jose, Cal., enroute home from his annual trip east; T. Geerie, representing Leonard Seed Co., Chicago.

SOME of the early catalogues that were minus their usual covers because of the lithographers' strike, are making a reappearance bedecked in all the hues of the rainbow.

A. J. PIETERS, of the A. J. Pieters Seed Co., Hollister, Cal., finds himself, because of the unusual season, unable to make the contemplated trip among the trade in the east.

THE Johnson & Musser Seed Co., Los Angeles, Cal., says that in the last five months of 1906 it sold to local gardeners more than 12,000 pounds of Holland grown spinach seed.

THE onion seed situation is unchanged. The demand for the Globe varieties is not so brisk as might have been expected, owing, probably, to the depression in the market for onion bulbs.

THE H. E. Fisk Seed Co., Boston, devotes twenty pages of its first general seed catalogue to plants and tubers, with several pages devoted to roses and a quite complete line of nursery stock.

THE mail trade from the south has been heavy for some weeks and difficulty has been experienced in filling orders, owing to the unusually late deliveries of many articles. Fine weather throughout the central states, for a week or more, has put seasonable life into the general mail trade and the rush soon will be on.

E. D. DARLINGTON, superintendent of Fordhook farm, the trial ground of W. Atlee Burpee & Co., Philadelphia, has an interesting illustrated article on sweet peas in the Garden Magazine for March.

ALBAUGH BROS., Dover & Co., general mail order house at 341 Franklin street, Chicago, are this season handling seeds, having issued a neat special catalogue, which they say is bringing them good returns to this date.

THE Livingston Seed Co., Columbus, O., which has to its credit the introduction of more tomatoes now standard than have been brought out by any other house, have another tomato novelty for 1907, Livingston's Hummer, described as especially desirable for canners, when the crop must be produced in a short time. It is bright scarlet, round, smooth and has less indenture about the stem end than any other variety.

MANY seed stores keep registers of gardeners seeking employment and make a practice of supplying their patrons with skilled help of this character, but so far as known Joseph Breck & Sons, Boston, is the only seed firm also conducting a general employment bureau. It has been in successful operation since 1890. The firm has, since 1905, also

HOLLAND BULB REPORT.

The beginning of the new year was as mild as if we were getting into summer instead of in the middle of the winter, but those who made the mistake to let themselves be fooled by this weather had every reason to be sorry by the middle of the month. At that time a sudden change from rain into 12 degrees of frost, with a killing east wind that did not fail to penetrate into the deepest corners of every protected part of the grounds, caused no little fright among the growers who had already partially uncovered their fields. However, it is not likely that any harm has been done, as very probably the soaked grounds closed up into one mass of ice and prevented the frost from getting any deeper. As, however, next day saw us in over 20 degrees of frost, with increasing wind that chilled even men to the very bones, the alarm became general but nothing could be done and we can only now await the results, which will be fully reported upon as soon as the cold breaks and conditions have developed.

TEXAS PLANTERS ORGANIZE.

At a meeting held at the Waco Cotton Laboratory of the United States Department of Agriculture, the Texas Seed Growers' Association was organized with thirty charter members. The purposes of the association are to encourage the improvement of seed of the fields, gardens and orchards; to seek improvement of all products of Texas soil, and to provide safeguards to the purchasers of home grown seeds. The following are the officers: President, T. V. Munson, Denison; vice-president, A. D. Mebane, Lockhart; secretary and treasurer, D. A. Sanders, Waco; directors with the above, A. M. Ferguson and E. S. Peters. The convention adopted resolutions favoring increase of state appropriations for the Agricultural and Mechanical College.

The meeting will be with that of the Texas Farmers' Congress.

THE CANNERS' CONVENTION.

The canners' convention, opening at Buffalo, February 12 and continuing through the week, was the largest in the history of this rapidly growing industry. Buffalo as a convention city cannot be improved upon, but its many large and up-to-date hotels were filled to overflowing by the canners and representatives of the trades allied to the packing industry. More than 2,000 persons were present.

The several canners' associations held daily sessions in the assembly room at the Iroquois hotel. The trade exhibit was located in the old Sixty-fifth Regiment armory and it was here that the principal activity of the week was found. The canning business, as with every other large industry, is closely related with other lines. The makers of tin cans, lithographed labels and many other specialties were largely represented. The canners are large buyers of certain lines of seeds. They use thousands of bushels of sweet corn, peas and beans and thousands of pounds of such smaller seeds as tomatoes, pumpkins, squash, beets, spinach, etc. The result was the attendance of a large number of seedsmen, some firms having as many as four salesmen present hustling for orders, which were booked in greater number and for heavier amounts than usual, so that the seed trade is well satisfied with the 1907 canners' convention.

Among the firms represented were: W. W. Barnard Co. and Leonard Seed Co., Chicago; D. M. Ferry & Co., Detroit, Mich.; Everett B. Clark Co., Milford, Conn.; Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y.; S. D. Woodruff & Co., Orange, Conn.; W. H. Grenell, Saginaw, Mich.; Pacific Seed Growers Co., San Francisco, Cal.; Bromfield, Colvin, Ries Co., Bay City, Mich.; Sioux City Seed & Nursery Co., Sioux City, Ia.; N. B. Keeney & Son, Leroy, N. Y.; Rogers Bros., Chaumont, N. Y.; Cleveland Seed Co., Avon, N. Y., and Coryell Seed Co.

The Jerome B. Rice Seed Co. made a nice display of peas and beans, also onion seed, and booked its usual amount of business. The Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, made a larger display than usual, of canners' specialties, mainly standard varieties of tomatoes, beans and peas, and report good bookings of orders. D. M. Ferry & Co. had a handsomely decorated booth, using photographs, seed packets and lithographed labels.

Phinney's string bean snipper attracted its share of attention. This is something new and these enterprising people had green string beans shipped from Cuba and gave a practical demonstration of its working, after which the beans were passed along to other exhibitors of process machinery, who cooked and put them into cans, these canned beans were handed out as souvenirs. Corn husking machines attracted much attention. This is something which has been worked on for years with only partial success. One husking machine in particular was shown which was not complicated and seemed to do fine work, stripping the ear clean of its husk and silk.

The seedsmen had no interest in the proceedings of the convention, as no topics relating to seeds were discussed. The most interesting feature to the canner was the opportunity presented of getting exact information on the requirements of the new pure food law, about which all the packers seem to be more or less in doubt. The machinery and supply dealers, who were, of course, strongly represented, gave a reception on Wednesday evening, and the American Can Co. leased the Lyric theater for one evening and gave a theater party for the entire convention.

THE MODERN GLADIOLUS.

Because of its adaptability to almost any soil and climate, the gladiolus is deservingly a favorite with all classes of gardeners. Its merit as a cut flower and value as an ornament to the garden are notable. If the spike is cut and placed in water as soon as the first bloom appears, every bud will open fully and last for four to ten days, according to the temperature. By making successive plantings about two weeks apart beginning as soon as the ground is thoroughly settled in the spring, one may secure continuous blossoms from early June until frost comes.

Although the gladiolus will stand much neglect and yield good results, if proper care is taken it will give results in proportion. Stable manure should be applied to the gladiolus bed in the autumn, and the bed should be well spaded and respaded in the spring. Bulbs should be planted from three to four inches deep, according to their size, and should be planted in rows twelve to eighteen inches apart, three to four inches apart in the row, for cutting purposes. Planted in mass for garden show they should be from four to six inches in either direction. Staking is sometimes necessary, especially where high winds prevail, but in most cases if staking is found necessary, says the National Council of Horticulture, it may be attributed to too shallow planting of the bulbs.

TEMPERATURE FOR GLADIOLI.

I have a few thousand Gladiolus nanus (Blushing Bride and Peach Blossom) planted in flats in a greenhouse. The leaves are now about twelve inches long and are beginning to turn brown and dry up at the tips, after which the whole leaf soon dies. The bulbs of these are found to be soft and decayed, though they have roots several inches in length. They have been watered twice with liquid manure. The flats have good drainage. The temperature of the house is 65 to 70 degrees. In some flats every plant is affected. Please tell me what is the cause of this and what to do for them. C. H. K.

Too much heat is unquestionably the cause of the dying referred to. Gladiolus nanus is impatient of forcing. The bulbs, after being placed in flats, should be started in a cold pit, or house just clear of freezing, and left there until the boxes are well matted with roots. They should never be subjected to a higher winter temperature than 50 degrees at night or failure is certain. These flowers cannot be forced as are narcissi, tulips and other bulbs.

We have several thousands of these which were planted in flats four inches deep December 5. They are now about three inches high, with the flats full of roots. They will not be introduced into heat for some time yet. We find they are far better when flowered from the last of April to the beginning of June than when an effort is made to force them earlier.

We are afraid it is too late to save any of your bulbs and can only ascribe your failure to forcing them too warm. Grown for Memorial day trade, there is no other bulbous plant to equal them, and to bloom them at that date they need no fire heat at any stage of their growth. C. W.

FOR NORTHERN TRADE.

[A paper by B. M. Wichers, Gretna, La., read before the Society of Southern Florists, at the New Orleans Convention, February 14 to 16, 1907.]

I promised to write a paper on "What a Southern Florist Can Produce for the Northern Trade." This embraces a large field and I think myself hardly able to cover it. As there is such a large variety to take up, I will divide it into five classes, as follows: Ferns, palms, aquatics, bulbs and roots, and foliage and flowering plants.

Ferns.

Ferns are my specialty and so I will make a few remarks on them first. The nephrolepis, in all the old and new varieties, are the most profitable for the southern florist to grow. My attention was first called to them some twenty-five years ago when I lived in south Florida where there were hundreds of acres of the N. exaltata growing wild. I started advertising and sold thousands of them all over the United States and Canada.

In 1898 I returned to Louisiana and saw that little effort was made here to supply the north with ferns. I at once made this my specialty. Little artificial heat is needed here to grow them. I generally begin the first part of April to move the plants outdoors, either in pots or plant them in the open field without any protection from the sun; but close watch has to be kept over them all summer to keep them well watered. The varieties I grow in the full sun are: N. exaltata, N. compacta, N. tuberosa; N. Bostoniensis, N. Piersoni, N. elegantissima, N. Barrowsii, N. Whitmani, N. Wittboldi, and N. Washingtoniensis.

N. Scottii and N. davallioides and all adiantums and other ferns need slight protection from the sun. A lattice shade giving one-quarter shade and three-quarters sun will make a good protection. By the middle of November they all should be in the house, as about that time we generally have a light frost. Plants growing this way will be full and stocky, and far superior to the northern grown, greenhouse stock, either as plants for decorating or for cutting.

Last summer I kept a record on a batch of N. Whitmani and they averaged forty runners to a plant in six months. I have shipped them by freight and had them three weeks on the road and they arrived in perfect condition.

Palms.

The palm is our next plant of great importance. All varieties can be more cheaply produced here than in any other state. Some varieties can be kept the entire year outdoors, while others need a little protection by coldframe, and only few varieties need a greenhouse for three or four months in the year. In the summer most varieties need a lattice shade to protect them against the hot sun.

Bulbs and Roots.

The bulb and root industry is very inviting for the southern florist. I will only mention a few which are well adapted to one or another of the southern states.

All amaryllis and crinums, hedychiums, curcumas, alpinias, phryniums, cooperias, zephyranthes, pancratiums, White Roman hyacinths, narcissi, tuberosas, fancy and other caladiums and alocasias and many other bulbs grow here to perfection.

Aquatics.

Next in order are the aquatics. All tender and hardy water lilies can be grown here the year around outdoors, with the least attention. If I could sell, for instance, all the tender water lilies I could produce at $4 per hundred, I would grow nothing else.

Some Comparisons.

To close, I will make a few remarks on plants in general. Many a good plant you don't see catalogued because it costs too much to keep a sufficient number of stock plants to propagate from in the north. In the south it is different. The florists have no trouble to winter over a lot of stock plants and can make cuttings the entire year, and the plants here are often far superior to the northern product. For instance: A. Clerodendron Balfouri rooted in the south from a hard-wood cutting will produce large bunches of flowers in a 2-inch pot, where a plant from a soft cutting growing in the north will not produce a flower under ordinary circumstances for two years.

There are also some plants that are not grown in this country at all and could be produced in some of the southern states, as the Laurus nobilis, the acacia and others.

In conclusion I will say that ninety-nine per cent of all plants grown in the north, the south should produce.

THE DEATH ROLL.

Mrs. Mary Somers.

Mary Somers, wife of Harry C. Somers, a well-known grower, of Chain Bridge road, Washington, D. C., died at her home, Monday, February 11, after a long illness. Mrs. Somers was the only daughter of Solomon Davis, who for a number of years has been successfully engaged in growing violets and miscellaneous plants. Deceased was 60 years of age and is survived by her husband and one son. J. L. C.

Jonathan Aucock.

Jonathan Aucock, an old and esteemed resident of Utica, died February 15. He had suffered from heart trouble for five weeks, although not confined to the house.

Jonathan Aucock was born at Snaith, Yorkshire, England, May 13, 1828. He received a good education and then was apprenticed to a gardener. He came to this country in 1850 and for one year worked at Hunter's Island, Westchester County. Next he went to Annandale, Dutchess County, and entered the employ of John Bard. Mr. Bard was a man of large means who had a splendid country seat on the North river, where he lived a retired life. Mr. Aucock had charge of his farm and garden for ten years. In 1867 Mr. Aucock came to Utica and bought a farm of eighteen acres on the Champlin road, Whitesboro. Here he established a vegetable garden, which he conducted quite successfully for many years. In 1876 he bought the property at 610 Whitesboro street, where he established a greenhouse. Later he established another greenhouse on Columbia street, just back of St. Luke's Hospital, which he conducted for ten years, until 1892. Then he removed his greenhouse to the side of his residence on Whitesboro street and here he conducted it very successfully until twelve years ago. Since then he has lived on Steuben street. He thoroughly understood his business and his greenhouses were models of neatness. He leaves a widow and four children.

J. C. Good.

J. C. Good, Tiffin, O., died January 29, aged 57 years. The business will be continued by Mrs. Good as executrix.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

The regular meeting of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Association was held Saturday evening, February 9, R. Boreham in the chair. A prize was awarded to H. Kieling for a bunch of roses. J. Bradley was second. There was a fine display of plants and cut flowers. C. Wilson staged a fine plant of a new asparagus. H. Kostberg staged some fine amaryllis blooms from his own seedlings. H. Kieling staged some fine violets. J. Bradley had some fine sprays of mignonette. The prize for the next meeting is to be for the best collection of cut flowers.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

THERE is hardly a planting of evergreens which does not include one or more of Koster's variety of the blue spruce.

W. C. GRIFFING, a Florida nurseryman, has purchased the Gulf Coast Nurseries, Belleville, Tex., founded by Harvey C. Stiles.

THE Perkins Nursery Co., McKinley, Tex., has been incorporated, by W. H. Perkins, F. D. Perkins and J. L. White, with $25,000 authorized capital stock.

THE nursery department of the Charles H. Lilly Co., Seattle, Wash., is sending out a new red raspberry named Superlative at the modest price of $1 per root.

THE Maryland Agricultural Experiment Station has issued two new bulletins of interest to the trade: No. 111, "The Oyster Shell Scale," and No. 112, "Treating San Jose Scale."

JOHN T. WITHERS has placed L. H. Wise in charge of the execution of his landscaping contracts on the grounds of the Jamestown exposition. It is spring on the exposition grounds and everything is advancing rapidly.

C. M. OLSTON, president of the Sioux Valley Nursery Co., Brookings, S. D., was taken sick February 8 with a mild form of smallpox. He was removed to the isolation hospital, where there already were two other cases.

THE advertising of fruits trademarked upon the package is becoming a quite common practice on the part of large producers or associations of growers. It is usually profitable, for the public recognize that fruit so marked and advertised must be good or the publicity will be a positive detriment to the growers. The latest of such advertising is by a firm of Florida growers of grape-fruit.

PLANTING HOME GROUNDS.

In ornamental planting, advises the National Council of Horticulture, it is important that great care be taken in grouping plants, making sure they fit in with the neighboring architecture and seeking to bring out some desired effect. The texture of the foliage, the color of the flowers, the season of the bloom and rapidity of growth should all be considered.

It is the object of the landscape gardener to create charming affects of sunlight and shadow and examples in miniature of nature's handiwork as seen in landscapes. All of a space should not be filled with plants, but there should be broad stretches of grass bordered with shrubbery, so arranged as to produce vistas. The habit of scattering plants all over a yard or of planting them in rows in several given directions is not ornamental planting. While the plants individually may be beautiful, their arrangement gives the idea of a wilderness and as a whole is unsightly. It spoils the individual beauty of the plants instead of bringing it out.

The border lines of a lot and the inside curves of a drive or walk usually require groups of shrubbery, also the corner of a building needs a mass of green to "tie the building to the ground." Unsightly objects should be completely covered by a screen of trees and shrubbery. Barns, outbuildings and fences usually do not have much architectural beauty and can easily be hidden from view by proper planting. There is an endless amount of material with which one may work. First of all the foundation of all landscape work is trees. These and the shrubs will form a framework for the flowers.

JAMESTOWN EXPOSITION.

Recently the grounds of the Jamestown exhibition of 1907, on the shore of the Hampton Roads, between Norfolk and Fort Monroe, were enclosed by a wire fence stretched on decorative posts. This fence will be covered with flowers and verdure. Twenty thousand rose bushes have been placed along the line of wire, and trumpet-vine and 125,000 honeysuckles have been planted. Before the gates of the exposition open, a thick mass of green commingling with honeysuckle flowers and roses will obscure all outside view.

It has been part of the decorative plan evolved by the board of design that native plans should be used as far as possible. Fifty thousand privet cuttings will be used, as well as between 10,000 and 20,000 cuttings of mountain laurel, and willow and miscellaneous collections from old Virginia gardens. Among the large shrubs will be hollies, maples, locusts, flowering dogwood, apple and cherry trees, red cedars, paper mulberries and water oaks. It has been the design to preserve the natural features of the grounds wherever possible.

The portion of tidewater Virginia, where the exhibition is to be held, is known for the luxuriance with which plants and flowers grow.

POMOLOGICAL SOCIETY.

The executive committee of the American Pomological Society has decided to hold the thirtieth biennial meeting of the society on the grounds of the Jamestown Exposition September 25 and 26, 1907. It is a long time since the society met in that region, and this seems an auspicious time for returning to it. The horticultural associations of the immediate section promise to unite in making the convention one of the most memorable in its history.

A number of important matters will come before the society at this time. Reports on the grading and inspection of fruits for home distribution and export purposes are due, and the members of the committee having this matter in hand have been working earnestly for the purpose of making a report which will record substantial progress. The committee on judging and score cards will add to the reports already presented and include a number of fruits not yet dealt with.

The history of fruit growing in this, one of the oldest sections of the country, is exceedingly interesting and carries with it many important lessons. This will be presented by competent authorities as time permits. In addition, various matters bearing upon the technical phases of fruit growing will be presented and discussed.

The exposition authorities have met us fully half way in the matter, and we shall have ample facilities for holding our meetings and for making a creditable exhibition. The sessions will be held in the Convention hall, and the exhibit will be staged in the interior court of the States Exhibit building.

The Society for Horticultural Science, Dean L. H. Bailey, of the Cornell College of Agriculture, Ithaca, N. Y., president, and Professor V. A. Clark, of the Arizona Experiment Station, Tucson, secretary, will meet in joint session with the American Pomological Society this year. This general announcement is made under the authority of the executive committee, Captain C. L. Watrous, Des Moines, Ia., chairman, L. A. Goodman, 4000 Warwick boulevard, Kansas City, Mo., president of the society, and John Craig, Ithaca, N. Y., secretary.

PACIFIC COAST.

Everett, Wash.—The Everett Floral Co., H. Petersen proprietor, is about to build three greenhouses, each 100 feet long.

The Everbest Nursery Co., of Wenatchee, Wash., has been incorporated with $60,000 authorized capital, by A. Van Holderbeke, J. F. Littoor and J. T. Brown.

VICTORIA, B. C.

During the cold spell in January several of the fraternity suffered. The thermometer registered 22 degrees of frost, with a strong north wind. As our houses are neither built nor piped for any such weather, lucky indeed was the man who could keep Jack Frost out. To add to our troubles there was a coal and wood famine and an insufficiency of teams. However, we all got through somehow and look forward to a tremendous bedding trade to make up for it.

Since the frost the demand for flowers has been good. The town is booming and good times are the result.

The Victoria Horticultural Society held its annual meeting last week. A strong committee was elected, $150 carried to reserve fund, with a substantial balance on hand. This was considered a most satisfactory state of affairs and the society will probably undertake to hold three shows this year instead of the two it held last season.

Edw. Alex Wallace.

SPOKANE, WASH.

Those people who take it for granted that the public taste in floral arrangement is not developed on the Pacific coast to as discriminative a point as in the east, simply have failed to keep in touch with the progress of the times. The Pacific coast has been favored with as great a degree of prosperity as in other sections of the country. The people are accustomed to the payment of good prices for good articles, in whatever line, and they are willing to pay the price for first-class flowers.

There are some good stores in many of the northern Pacific coast cities and Spokane has several of them. The accompanying illustrations are from photographs of the store of the Spokane Florist Co., the manager of which is Miss Amy K. Luffman, who is well known throughout the United States through her several years of service as assistant to the secretary of the S. A. F. at the annual conventions. Her home was in Alabama, but she spent several years in Chicago and on going to Spokane a couple of years ago took a knowledge of floral work which was up to the best practice of the day and which has been a considerable factor in developing the floral taste of the community. The people in Spokane are as ready as any others to grasp a new idea in decorating.

Store of Spokane Florist Co., Spokane, Wash.

The Market.

Bright, warm weather continues and flowers remain plentiful. This is especially noticeable in all lines of bulbous stock and never at any time within the history of the business here has this class of stock been so plentiful and cheap. Daffodils, although in good demand, have been in overabundant supply and have been sold wholesale as low as $3 per thousand. Narcissi have been offered at even a less figure, but as the bulk of this popular flower is now cut, it will advance in a few days.

Indoor carnations also are gradually lowering in price. The growers have been making efforts to keep the figures as high as they were during December and January, but, owing to the quantities being offered, there has been the usual result and prices have decreased considerably. This has not been the result with roses, however, as there has been but a scant supply for several weeks, with no prospects for any increase for another month at least.

Some relief from the green goods famine is in sight with the advent of wild maidenhair fern. Adiantum, of all descriptions, has been one of the scarcest articles in our category for several months and even asparagus has been almost impossible to obtain at times, but when the wild fern is in season it will bridge over the time very nicely until we again can get all the tame maidenhair required.

Business considering that Lent has commenced is good.

Various Notes.

P. K. Keller, of Piedmont, has sold the ground recently devoted to the nursery business to speculators who will improve it by the erection of stores and houses.

Bros., of Milwaukee, is in town on a few days' visit.

Charles Beebe, formerly of Trumbull & Beebe, is contemplating again embarking in the seed business, in Oakland. Mr. Beebe lost heavily by our recent fire but he is willing to try his luck again.

S. L. Morris, formerly of San Jose, Cal., has removed to Berkeley, where he will continue in the business of landscape gardening.

James O'Neill, Jr., has taken charge of the Myrobolan Nurseries at Haywards.

P. J. Meyer & Co., of Burlingame, are cutting an extra fine lot of Prosperity and Enchantress carnations.

The Japanese nurserymen are taking up peddling plants around the outskirts of nearby towns. One ambitious dealer has three wagons steadily employed and is apparently handling considerable stock.

Complaint is made by the sweet pea growers that the excessive moisture of last month has ruined many of the plantings and as a consequence there will be a shortage of early flowers. G.

HOLLYHOCKS.

The hollyhock is an old garden favorite of strong growth and most ornamental character. A few years ago a disease appeared which made it difficult to grow successfully, but the disease has been controlled and new interest is now being taken in hollyhocks. A large number of named varieties is now catalogued. Plants which have been grown during the winter in pots under glass should be available for planting out in the spring and should be moved as soon as the soil is moderately warm and in good workable condition. Their cultivation is simple and they should bloom early. Where the weather is cool they will continue to bloom for many weeks, but hot weather shortens their flowering period. The hollyhocks are grown in both the single and double forms and there are many varieties to select from. Within the last few years, says the National Council of Horticulture, a strain has been developed which will bloom the first year from seed. By starting them in March and giving attention to culture flowers should be had in ten to fifteen weeks. These plants can be treated as annuals.

To raise plants for flowering next spring, sow seed in August and when the plants are a few inches high transplant them to small pots or set them out in a coldframe. Water should be given as needed and good drainage supplied. If the plants are in pots, put them first in 2-inch pots and transplant to 3-inch or 4-inch pots three or four weeks later. They will be protected in the frame in the winter months and will be in excellent condition to set out in the early spring.

SCALE ON NEPHROLEPIS.

What is the remedy for a hard, brown scale that infests ferns and other plants? My ferns are infested just now. I have tried cutting them down, but I have one large one that I do not want to cut. I enclose sample. E. D.

The portion of a nephrolepis frond that was enclosed with this query showed plainly that the plant in question was badly infested with the common brown scale, or turtle scale, as this pest is frequently termed.

The best treatment would be to first cut off the worst fronds, and then dip in tobacco solution. Or, if the plant is too large to be dipped conveniently, lay it on its side and syringe thoroughly with the tobacco solution. A solution of one part of Rose Leaf extract of tobacco to fifty parts of water will answer, but may need to be applied several times in order to kill all the insects.

It is best to protect the plant from the sun during the time the tobacco treatment is being given, or the tips of the fronds may suffer.

Club Meeting.

At the well-attended February meeting of the Springfield Florists' Club, Assistant Postmaster O. F. Serviss gave an interesting and instructive off-hand talk on postal matters, touching upon numerous questions of importance to the catalogue florists.

Mr. Serviss stated that in the last eight or ten years the receipts of the Springfield post-office have doubled, attributing this fact to the enormous growth of outputs in catalogues and products of the various greenhouses in the line of plants, seeds and bulbs.

It was recommended that whenever one-third of a sack or more of mail for any one state is ready to forward, nothing for any other state be put into the same sack, provided, however, that the post-office furnish an adequate supply of sacks, which is not always possible.

The abolition of the back stamp was favored by the speaker as well as by practically everybody present.

A more equitable adjustment of postage rates between second, third and fourth-class matter was advocated, and Mr. Serviss recommended that facts and figures be collated as to the amount of postal business done in the aggregate by local florists, and that the matter be presented in due form to our congressman. The entire postal system is conceded to be built upon quite antiquated lines and a committee of congress has the matter under consideration with a view to thoroughly modernizing the department.

At the close of this excellent talk Mr. Serviss volunteered to answer questions, or to meet with the club again at any time, and he was interrogated by various members as to means of correcting mailing lists and various other subjects. A vote of thanks was then tendered to the speaker and a committee appointed to take in hand the suggestions made, the committee consisting of Geo. H. Mellen, Harry Good and William Reeser.

Leman Bradford, of The Springfield Floral Co., was missing from this meeting, owing to a superior attraction in the shape of a new daughter.

TORONTO, CAN.—A man representing himself as an undertaker has been defrauding dealers here out of flowers. He is said to have obtained various quantities from J. H. Dunlop, J. S. Simmons and others. He was caught in Tidy & Son's store, on King street.

LARNED, KAN.—Tyra Montgomery reports a good demand for cut flowers, stock coming from a grower seventy miles distant. There is an opening here for a good man to raise cut flowers exclusively, as such a one could command territory within a radius of sixty miles.

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

The florists of Springfield do a business fully three times as large as they did fifteen years ago, do it in far better fashion and are generally given free hands when a case of decorative work is in question. The growth of the business locally is evidenced by the fact that in the various greenhouses of Springfield are over 75,000 feet of glass, the largest houses being those owned by Mark Aitken on Osgood street, which have some 25,000 feet of glass. Mr. Aitken imports 200,000 Dutch and French bulbs, while E. B. Beals imports 75,000 more, and the total importation will reach well above the 350,000 mark. Carnations, lilies of the valley, violets and roses are brought in from Cromwell, Conn., or Boston by the millions in the course of the year, while large quantities of less popular flowers are either grown here or are imported. Just now the florists are busy preparing for Easter, and thousands and thousands of Easter lily bulbs are being urged to flower in time. The Azores bulbs are being tried this year.

All the cut roses and lilies of the valley and violets, and a good share of the carnations consumed locally are imported either from the Pierson houses in Cromwell, Conn., or from Boston growers. E. B. Beals is one of the local dealers who grows carnations, and has in his houses 5,000 plants.

N. F. Higgins has 10,000 feet of glass. He uses his houses more to grow bedding plants, but also grows a number of carnations. Like Mr. Aitken, he buys the bulk of his cut flowers from Pierson at Cromwell. Ostermann & Steele have no houses, and import practically all their flowers from Boston. One of the earliest florists in Springfield was B. K. Bliss, who did a large seed business and was one of the first to issue a catalogue. William Schlatter, who has conducted a business in upper Bay street for the last eleven years, and has worked here for other florists since 1866, tells of Mr. Bliss' bringing out the Early Rose potato, which sold at $2 a pound for seed purposes. A Greenfield farmer secured two tiny tubers of this potato, each about as large as a small marble, and asked Mr. Schlatter to see what he could do with them. Mr. Schlatter cut the tubers in two, planted them, cut them down and planted the cuttings until by multiplication he grew 200 hills of fine potatoes within three months, all from the original two tubers.

Martinsville, N. Y.—G. A. Belling has sold his greenhouse business and has entered the field of greenhouse builders.

Orange, N. J.—An overheated furnace caused a fire in the greenhouse in the rear of St. John's rectory February 9, destroying the plants, among which were some fine orchids.

3 NEW CANNAS

WILLIAM SAUNDERS

The flowers are large, of splendid form, and are borne very freely in immense clusters. The color is a deep rich shining scarlet slightly dappled with crimson. Foliage is a rich bronze. Height, 3½ to 4 feet. We believe that Wm. Saunders is decidedly the most perfect Canna of this type that has been introduced. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

OTTAWA

Is a strong grower, very robust and 5 to 6 feet high. The flowers are large and beautifully formed, color is carmine with tints of old rose and deep coral, add to this the silken sheen and you can imagine the effect a few plants will produce.

NOTE—We had this Canna on trial among the Canadian experimental stations last summer and this is the official report of their expert: "Quite distinct and one of the most beautiful shades of color I ever saw in Cannas. Of 70 massed in one bed during the past season, this was the most floriferous in the collection, coming into bloom early and continuing until cut down by frost, as many as 13 expanded heads of blooms being counted at one time on a plant, and not a poor one among them, all being of immense size." 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

NEW YORK

Has the Orchid type of flower. They have much more substance than the flowers of the other varieties of this class, and will stand the hot sunshine as well as the toughest varieties of cannas. The color is a solid rich scarlet covered with a beautiful glowing sheen. The flowers are large and contrast beautifully with the dark bronze foliage. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

Send for our list and prices of 60 other leading varieties of Cannas.

MABELLE
NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. No discount. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

The Market.

Trade has been all that the most enthusiastic could desire during the last month. The only drawback has been the great shortage of stock, especially roses and carnations. Since December 1 we have had something like six days of sun altogether, and it is simply a wonder that there are any flowers at all.

As regards prices there has been a stiffening all along the line.

The Florists' Club.

Since my last report there have been three meetings of the club, and much good work has been accomplished. Every evening since the adoption of the point system of awards, substantial prizes to be given for the three highest totals at the end of the season, there have been creditable displays of both plants and flowers. There has been a large attendance at each meeting and our club is certainly prospering.

At the last meeting it was voted to drop from the rolls all members who do not pay their dues, as prescribed by our by-laws. Andrew Blum, who is with the Clover Hill Greenhouses, was elected an active member. Our club will this year again put up and take charge of the distribution of the penny packets of flower and vegetable seeds for the children of the public schools. This matter of school and home gardens is developing rapidly here and great good is being accomplished. Our next meeting will be February 26.

Various Notes.

Both William and Samuel Graff, of Graff Bros., are spending the week in Chicago, attending the wedding of their sister, Matilda Graff, to Herman Landfield, which ceremony takes place February 24 at the Unity Club house.

The Clover Hill Greenhouses are making quite a specialty of the new pink spiræa, Queen Alexandra.

The East Liverpool Potteries have dissolved.

The Ohio State Horticultural Society has made arrangements to supply its members, and, in fact, all who apply with spraying material of all kinds at wholesale prices.

The Livingston Seed Co. made a most beautiful and pleasing display of foliage plants for the opening of a new department at Armbruster's big store.

BALTIMORE.

The Market.

At last the sun has come forth and has brought out considerably more cut flowers. From the appearance of some of the retail windows, which are tastefully arranged, there seems to be a full supply. Business has been fairly good, both wholesale and retail, and cleans up everything. St. Valentine's day was observed in many ways. Many cut flowers were used. Violets had the principal call, hundreds of orders being filled. Many dinners were served and these called for various kinds of decorations. Funeral work seems to stay, a great amount of this kind of work being disposed of daily.

Roses are a little more plentiful. Carnations are doing fairly well, all being disposed of every morning. Violets are enough to meet the demands. The double violet is almost a thing of the past; we depend mostly on the singles. Paper Whites are scarce. Callas still are short of their usual supply. Plenty of freesias can be had, both long and short stems. Sweet peas are not plentiful and sell well. Greens of all kinds can be had.

The market florists are out again with stalls filled with various kinds of plants and the appearance proves that Easter is approaching. The public patronizes them and there is little left to take home.

The demand for gladioli this year exceeds last year and many more will be grown here for market.

Various Notes.

J. O. Strand, Waverly, Md., reports that he has had a good cut of Christmas Pink sweet peas. In one month he cut 4,618.

Monday, February 11, a strike at the Pratt street power-house tied up the street car system and affected business, also the attendance at the meeting of the Gardeners' Club, as the members nearly all depend upon the cars in coming and reaching home and many stayed at home, fearing that they would be held in town.

E. A. Seidewitz had a catchy advertisement in one of the daily papers. It read as follows "Flowers as a valentine, the proper caper."

From present indications there will be a much greater demand for Paper White narcissi this year than last.

KANSAS CITY.

The Market.

Stock has been scarce and there has not been near enough to supply the demand. Trade on Valentine's day was good. Plants in pots and pans found ready sale. Narcissi and daffodils were in the lead. Azaleas went slowly and seemed out of date; people are getting tired of them. This market does not seem to be good on azaleas after January.

There was a great demand for red flowers. Any one having red carnations had no trouble in disposing of them; in fact the market was cleaned up the day before, as orders were booked in advance. The man who can produce a red carnation that will bloom as freely as the Lawson would have a little gold mine of his own.

Violets were plentiful and prices remained high, but the flowers were good. There was quite a call for violets, also several calls for violets in pots on Valentine's day.

Various Notes.

George M. Kellogg is shipping in some good Enchantress carnations.

Anderson & Hammarlund are cutting some choice Flamingo carnations. They claim that The Queen carnation is the best for white, and it shows up good on their benches. Their bench of Lawsons is a fine sight.

Charles Laundy's carnations are looking fine considering the cloudy weather this city has had to contend with the last five or six weeks.

W. H. Humfeld is out again after three weeks of sickness with the grip.

Visitors for the last two weeks were: A. F. Longren, of the Chicago Carnation Co.; E. C. Pruner, with the E. F. Winterson Co.; Martin Reukauf, of H. Bayersdorfer & Co., and F. J. Farney, of the A. L. Randall Co., and all report business as good all over the country.

W. H. H.

The erection of a ten-story building between Ninth and Tenth streets on Walnut street has been delayed by a florist named James Papadakos, who rents a small building on the site of the proposed new building. He refuses to move and the matter is now in the courts.

READING, PA.—Fire from an overheated furnace did a slight damage at the greenhouse of I. H. Anderson February 10.

CACTUS GERANIUMS

A very unique and strikingly beautiful distinct type which, originating in England but a few years ago, at once won a place in great popular favor as a pot plant, for the conservatory and window boxes, for which they are unusually pleasing and attractive, on account of their remarkably handsome and thrifty but dwarf growth, small foliage, and marvelous profusion of bloom.

The Cactus has by common consent been recognized as a distinctive term applied to certain type of Dahlias, Cinerarias, etc., but none deserve the appellation more so than the Cactus Geranium, with its admirable elegance of form, exquisite, graceful, narrow petals, similar to those of the Cactus Dahlia.

We offer a collection of four varieties, and to introduce them into every collection, we will for a short time send one dozen by mail postpaid for $1.50.

PELARGONIUM PELTATO ZONAL

Alliance, (Lemoine 1905)

An exquisitely beautiful novelty of the highest order. A hybrid between an Ivy and a Zonal, and which has retained all the good points of both parents, including the beautiful soft finish of the Ivy and the hardy constitution of the Zonal.

It is therefore, not an ordinary variety but an extraordinary variety in all the good points that go to make up an attractive Geranium. Its color is the most exquisite shade of delicate lilac white, upper petals feathered and blotched beautiful bright crimson rose. Flowers semi-double, abundantly produced in fine large trusses on long stems.

Habit is excellent, robust, strong, close jointed; for vases or as a pot plant it is unequalled.

25c each; $2.50 per doz.; to introduce we will send postpaid for a short time.

IVY-LEAVED GERANIUM

Caesar Franck, (Lemoine 1905)

This is unquestionably destined to become the most popular Ivy Geranium yet introduced; the color is the most magnificent shade of soft crimson, with an exquisite shading of tender rose at the base of the petals. The flowers are about as double as the Crimson Rambler Rose, which they resemble, only much richer in color and finish, produced on long stems in enormous trusses. Habit, vigorous, quick growing and pleasing with a strong constitution. For baskets and vases it is all that could be desired.

Considering its general good behavior, being in keeping with its other good points, we are convinced that it is a most desirable sort.

25c each; $2.50 per doz.; to introduce it everywhere we will send postpaid for a short time.

Current Comment.

Trade for the last week has been extra good, St. Valentine's day being a big factor. All the store men report a rushing business on that occasion; in fact, some class it with Christmas day. The business will stand a few of these days mixed in; they constitute the sugar plums. The weather man is doing better and altogether the world looks considerably brighter.

William Dow, of the Belleview greenhouses, is studying for the medical profession.

Irwin Bertermann has a seedling carnation he is justly proud of. It is a good, bright pink with a fine stem and calyx, something on the Imperial order. It is the result of a cross between Prosperity and Enchantress.

The Bash Seed Co. is putting in a full line of florists' supplies and aims to keep it up-to-date, something that was needed in this city.

Baur & Smith have had fine success in disposing of their 2-inch geraniums. They went like hot cakes. Advertising does it. Next year this firm will be strictly in it when it comes to 2-inch geraniums. They could have sold thousands more if they had had them.

Theodore Dorner, of Lafayette, has become a member of the State Florists' Association. S.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.—Practical jokers have been using the telephone for malicious mischief, such as giving Henry Morris fictitious orders for flowers to be delivered at the homes of well-known people and charged.

PREPARE FOR EASTER

An immense stock of choice Easter plants, blooming Easter week, or earlier if desired, are now ready for immediate shipment. Come or mail your order direct to the headquarters. Our reputation over the entire country from the Atlantic to the Pacific in growing Easter stuff for the wholesale market for many years past ought to be sufficient guarantee as to the truth of what we say and advertise. We have every house, nook and corner full of plants and they were never so fine as this year, 1907. While laborers, merchants, jobbers, contractors, builders, etc., have increased their prices almost double as usual, we have not advanced our prices; but look, we sell our plants at the same old prices charged two or three years ago when the cost of producing plants was much cheaper.

What was my duty on my trip to Ghent, Belgium (the land of azaleas, araucarias and palms), last fall, 1906? Answer: Of course, the interests of my customers, not speaking of the 1100 souvenir cards which I mailed to my customers in America. For the benefit of my customers I also bought Azalea Indica for Easter trade, the cream of Belgium's production that money could buy.

Now I am able to offer to my customers, and the trade in general, two houses full of Mme. Vander Cruysen azaleas, the well known and much favored best double pink azalea that has given so much satisfaction all over America. Plants as round as an apple, just covered with buds, 6-in. pots, at 60c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 and $2.00 each. Other fine varieties adapted for American markets, such as Niobe, Benard, Andre Alba, Deutsche Perle (double white), Prof. Wolters, Empress of India, Vervæneana (double variegated), and about eight more fine sorts, all covered with buds, price 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 and $2.00 each. We have a fine limited quantity of azaleas, 50c to 60c each, such as Apollo (double dark scarlet), Deutsche Perle, Simon Mardner, and a few others.

Hydrangea Otaksa (pink), 6 to 7-in. pots, 40c, 50c, 75c to $1.00 each; also $1.25 and $1.50 each.

Lilium Multiflorum and Japanese Longiflorum were never so fine as this year, all sizes, and can meet all wants, 6-in. pots, 5 to 8 buds to a plant, 10c per bud, 4 buds and under, 12c per bud.

Spiraea Gladstone, 6 to 7-in. pots, these plants are very large and bushy and unusually fine, full of buds, at 50c, 75c and $1.00 each.

Cineraria Hybrida, have a house full all shades, 5, 5½ to 6-in. pots, $2.50, $3.00, $4.00 to $5.00 per doz.

Crimson Rambler Roses, 3 feet high and over, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 to $2.00 each.

Begonia, new improved Erfordii, an immense bloomer, blooming the entire summer and winter, 5¼-in. pots, $3.00 per doz.; 4-in. pots, $1.80 per doz.

Primula Obconica, 5¼-in. pots, $2.50 per doz.; 4-in. pots, $1.80 per doz.

White Daisies (Queen Alexandra and Marguerites) 5¼ to 5½-in. pots, $2.50 per doz.

Areca Sapida (palms), 6-in. pots, 50c each.

Dracaena Bruanti, 6-in. pots, 50c each.

Ferns, Nephrolepis Barrowsii, 6-in. pots, 50c to 75c each.

Scottii, 8-in. pots, very large, $1.50 each; 5-in. pots, 35c each.

Boston Ferns, 7-in. pots, 75c; 6-in. pots, 40c to 50c each; 5-in. pots, 25c to 30c each.

Holly Ferns, 3-in. pots, $1.20 per doz.

Kentia Forsteriana, 7-in. pots, made-up, one large plant in center, 3 small around. $1.50 to $1.75 each. Single plants, 36, 45 to 50 inches high, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Araucaria Compacta Robusta, five years old, 7-in. pots, 25 to 30 inches high, 4 to 5 tiers, width the same as height, very swell stuff, $1.75, $2.00 to $2.50 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, 4 years old, 4 tiers, 20 inches high, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50 each. Specimen Glauca, 7-in. pots, 5 years old, 5 tiers, 30 to 35 inches high, $3.00 each.

Araucaria Excelsa, 4 years old, 6-in. pots, 20 to 25 inches high, 5, 6 to 7 tiers, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 each.

Hyacinths, raised from first-class bulbs of my own importation. King of the Blues, Lavender (blue), Gertrude (best pink), La Grandesse (white), 4-in. pots, $12.00 per 100.

Tournesol Tulips, red and yellow variegated, the best selling Tulips on the market. Will stay in bloom 10 days. 3 bulbs planted in a 4-in. pot, $12.00 per 100 or $1.50 per doz.

Double Von Sion Daffodils, the best double yellow narcissus in the world, will sell on sight. 3 double-nosed bulbs planted in 5, 5½ and 6-in. pots, $2.50 to $3.00 per doz. pots. All bulbs are strictly first-class, of my own importation and are now outside in coldframe and will bloom in about two weeks after bringing in greenhouse.

Have about 200 pots Von Sion Daffodils, 5¼-in. pots, 3 plants in a pot, in greenhouse now, in bud ready to open for immediate sale at $2.00 per doz. This is a special offer, only good for a few weeks.

Moonvines, Ipomaea Noctiflora (A. W. Smith, originator), best pure white, largest and most fragrant moonvine in the world. I made a specialty of them for the past 15 years and am known as the Moonvine Grower of America and grow yearly about 20,000. In 2½-in. pots, $5.00 per 100. Now ready.

Directions to visit my place: Take Germantown or Willow Grove car at 13th and Market Sts. to Ontario St., or 8th and Market St., and take Germantown, Chestnut Hill or Willow Grove car to Ontario St. In going either route you walk two squares east on Ontario St. Mention if pots are wanted with all plants. DENVER.

The Market.

Trade has been quite good for this season of the year. Roses are scarce, but all other stock can be had in quantity. The coming of Lincoln's birthday, Valentine's day and Washington's birthday nearly all together created a good demand for flowers, violets perhaps having the call on Valentine's day. One of the stores reported having sold over 15,000 for that purpose.

Bride and Bridesmaid are beginning to come in better quantities, but prices as yet have shown little or no tendency to weaken and Beauties, especially long-stemmed ones, are scarce.

Carnations are a little more plentiful, although there were not enough red to go around February 14. Prices are about the same, $2 to $4 per hundred. Bulbous flowers are in active demand and some good stock is seen. Asparagus sprays, Sprengeri and adiantum continue to be scarce articles.

Various Notes.

J. A. Valentine, Emil Glauber and N. A. Benson have returned from the carnation convention at Toronto, visiting several eastern cities on their way.

The Park Floral Co. has a fine crop of blooming plants coming on. They will be right on edge for Easter.

The Market.

Business last week was good. St. Valentine's day helped out immensely and from reports it was the best that we have had for a good many years. Violets sold remarkably well. The fine weather helped considerably and, no doubt, was the cause of the heavy demand for them. The quality could hardly be excelled. Some of the finest Princess of Wales ever offered in this section are on the market in large numbers. The cut being unusually heavy the price has declined to some extent, present wholesale prices being 75 cents to $1 per hundred.

Roses and carnations are in the best of condition and in some places only specimen blooms are offered, which are retailed at $2.50 and $3 per dozen without any difficulty. Carnations range from 75 cents to $1 per dozen.

Greenhouse Heating.

SIZE OF PIPE.

We contemplate building a greenhouse 27x100, twelve feet to the ridge, with walls five feet high. There will be a bench three feet wide along each wall and three inside benches five feet wide with walks all around them. How many 3-inch hot water mains should we have overhead and how many 2-inch returns under the benches to keep the house at a temperature of 60 degrees at 10 degrees below zero? The base of our Idyle boiler is about five feet below the surface. Where should be the highest point of the flow pipes? W. E. D.

Your house can be heated by using a single 3½-inch flow pipe under the ridge and seventeen 2-inch returns. If you prefer to use two flow pipes, use 2½-inch, as they have sufficient capacity to provide for the radiation supplied by the 2-inch returns. The highest point in the hot water system should be at the point in the flow pipe where it divides to furnish the returns, i. e., the most distant point from the boiler. Connect the expansion tank to the main return near the boiler and elevate it as much as possible, fifteen to forty feet.

L. C. C.

THE BEST TYPE OF BOILER.

There are so many different styles of heating boilers on the market, each purported to be perfect, or at least the best, that usually the florist is puzzled when it comes to making a selection.

Many of us have our ideas as to what a good boiler should consist of and occasionally these ideas get into print, and are productive of some good, either helping those in need of a new heating apparatus in determining which one of the many styles meets his requirements and combines the greatest number of advantages, or in offering suggestions for the manufacturers' consideration. Just now we are looking for hot water and steam boilers that will unite the gases properly, giving us the most heat from the least coal, with little or no waste.

I believe this can be accomplished in no other way than by producing perfect and rapid combustion of the fuel used. Bricked-up steel tubular boilers are advocated in preference to the fire-box, because the brick fire-box can be maintained at a higher temperature than the steel fire-box type, where the water-jacket around the fire has a marked cooling tendency.

To combine the advantages of both types in one, I advocate lining the fire-box with at least four inches of fire brick, top, sides, front and back, making the box large enough to permit a full size grate and heating surface. Then brick in the boiler so that the heat after passing through the flues drops down at the farther end, returning underneath the boiler toward the front nearly as far as the fire-box, then up over the top of the boiler, back to the farther end and stack.

One more suggestion, and one that I believe is of vital importance, if proper combustion is to take place. Have the brick above the boiler arched the flat way, two inches thick, and above this a closed warming pan, covered with magnesia, full width and length of the boiler, at least six inches high, with an opening near the rear end two-thirds the area of the opening in the stack that may be closed tight or gradually opened to full size for draught. In the bottom near the front end have two 3-inch openings, one at either side, at least three inches in diameter for fifteen horse-power boilers. Connect with these openings three-inch pipes extending downward inside the fire-box close to the brick lining. As these pipes approach the bed of coals, put in two tees, one for each 3-inch pipe, the full length of the grate, with spiral openings directed toward the fire. Close the ash-pit tight and observe the following results by giving air through the rear opening of the pan. Instead of cold air striking the underside of the fire to cool it, as a draught through the ash-pit does, we have a hot blast that permits the proper temperature and conditions for the thorough uniting of all gases, thus consuming the smoke, giving us clean flues, therefore hotter water, with less fuel.

With a brick lined fire-box and hot blast effect, you get gases sufficiently heated that you can use the three-way pass before reaching the stack and obtain heat in the top pass that is still warmer than the water. When it is desired, a pipe may be attached at the rear opening of the pan and forced draught applied. This is most effective and desirable. In bricking in the rear end, just above the flue line a steel plate may be placed with the handle outside, permitting the sliding of the same, giving direct draught through the flues and up the stack when wanted in starting the fire and otherwise. The grates should be of some rocker pattern with close mesh so that it will accommodate screenings and head-end cinders.

With this combination we believe we have an ideal heating boiler, one that gives the most heat for the least money expended in fuel. Put fresh screenings on your fire, go out and look at the top of the stack and see if black smoke is pouring out. If it is, you may be sure that perfect combustion is not taking place. The gases are not uniting properly and you are losing a large percentage of the heat that is in the coal. On the other hand, with your boilers fitted up as above, you may close your ash-pit doors and open the hot blast draft with the result that black smoke gases are burned and only the light mist is noticeable above the stack. This is not theory, but practice from actual tests made on a smaller scale.

There are boilers on the market using the three-way pass, but the gases are not sufficiently heated and united to make the top pass of material benefit. The only way this can be accomplished is through the hot blast principle, with the aid of brick lining for the fire-box.

DETROIT.

The Market.

St. Valentine's day created a big demand for violets and cut flowers in general. With the advent of Lent business has quieted down some and with this decrease in demand is the influx of bulbous stock, the result being a glut of colored carnations, tulips, hyacinths, daffodils, etc. White carnations and, in fact, all white flowers keep well cleaned up, owing to the large amount of funeral work.

Even though other stock is plentiful, roses are not equal to the demand. The Michigan Cut Flower Exchange is handling some fine La Detroit. Short-stemmed roses are scarce.

Various Notes.

Theodore Mitchell played the genial host to a number of the younger members of the club Tuesday evening, February 12.

S. S. Skidelsky spent several busy days in and about Detroit recently. He was much pleased with the appearance of the Rose-pink Enchantress stock at Schroeter's greenhouse. As a result of the big demand Mr. Skidelsky has found it necessary to refuse orders until those already on hand are filled.

If you have some chenille lying around that has become soiled through exposure to dust and dirt, take a coil at a time and give it a good washing with soap and water, rinse and hang up to dry. It will come out as clean and soft as when new.

It has been rumored that a new store is to be opened on Broadway in the near future.

E. A. Fetters is back in the city again.

A ridiculous advertisement was recently seen in the Detroit daily papers. It was inserted by the floral department of one of the large drygoods stores and ran in part as follows: "Carnations 35 cents per dozen. Only three dozen will be sold to one customer, so as to keep them out of the dealers' hands."

M. Keller, of Reed & Keller, New York, was a visitor last week.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y.—James Coleman's boiler burst during the recent cold spell and he lost a house of antirrhinums.

DENVER, COLO.—J. A. Valentine reached home February 18 after a visit to eastern growers following the carnation meeting at Toronto. Among the growers visited were those at New York, Philadelphia, Richmond, Lafayette, Chicago and Council Bluffs.

H AND C

The Supreme Question

in manufacturing costs, today, is production costs—it's not all in what a thing costs you, but what it's costing the manufacturer. If we were running our factory on a "loose end" basis, it's safe to say you would get a "rule of thumb" house, and because of our lost motion we could not afford to give you the best materials—but we don't do business that way! Our manufacturing cost is down so fine that you can't beat our quality at our price anywhere in the market—and you'll have pleasant dealing. Write us.

The leakage of heat in a greenhouse becomes not only a matter of "Love's Labor Lost," but that depressing one of expense. U-Bar greenhouses are the best greenhouses built because there is no form of construction so light, so absolutely leak-free, none so easy to heat, none so easy to keep heated. YOU WILL SAVE ON REPAIRS the first five years more than the difference in first cost of material. If you want full value for your money and a "square deal," be sure to get that next house from us. Write for our estimate.

Traveling in the Right Direction

The way the fire travels in a boiler has a lot to do with the coal bin. The percentage of heat that goes up your chimney is that much less into your houses. The longest possible distance between two points (the fire and the smoke flue) in fire travel, is what makes the "Burnham" Sectional Boiler the boiler it is for greenhouses.
Three times the length of the boiler, passing over water ways so constructed as to give the water circulation a minimum of friction; then up chimney after pretty much all the heat is harnessed.

The longest way around (consistent with draft) then, is the shortest way to coal economy —when it's fire travel.

THE RETAIL FLORIST.....

RETAILERS' FIXTURES.

An Important Consideration.

The accompanying illustration will serve to give an idea of the character of fixtures required for an up-to-date flower store. It shows only a part of one side of the store, including a bit of the show window at the front, the display case for cut flowers, then a large beveled-plate mirror, and then a display case for small baskets, hampers, etc., the more bulky articles being kept elsewhere. The tables are of brass frames and marble tops. They are used only for the display of stock, all wrapping being done behind the scenes. It is not every retailer who can afford mahogany fixtures made to order, but it pays to have them as good as circumstances will warrant. About the best asset a retail store can have is a reputation for good taste, and an ill equipped and poorly arranged store gives a first impression which it takes much good work to counteract. So long as first impressions are what they are it is well to have them in our favor instead of against us. Not infrequently one is prejudiced against a store by its appearance, and every now and then we hear someone say, "That place looks all right; let's go in there."

The picture reproduced was taken at the store of C. A. Samuelson, 2128 Michigan avenue, Chicago.

FUNERAL WORK.

In placing orders for funeral designs the public has to trust a great deal to the florist's practical, as well as artistic, ability and reliability, as we have no samples or models to show; nothing but the loose flowers, frames, and, in most cases, poor photographs. We all know that floral designs never show up to advantage in a picture.

Of course people who have had some previous experience in buying designs usually know about what pieces are suitable, and it is merely necessary to settle on the price. Even people who are fortunate enough to be inexperienced in ordering funeral flowers, in many cases leave it to the artist.

Sometimes, though, you will run up against a hard proposition. Your prospective customer may not have the least idea as to what he wants or needs. "I want a nice pillow," or some such remark is often heard when really a spray or a wreath is meant, or vice versa. Here is where you have to fall back on your design book. A good and inexpensive one can be acquired by cutting pictures out of the REVIEW and mounting them in a suitable book.

Many florists advocate the sending of sprays of flowers. Of course, speaking from an artistic standpoint, a large, loose spray is ahead of the ordinary floral piece. But we who depend on this business for our bread and butter make a big mistake in talking sprays only, for when stock is plentiful short stuff is bound to pile up and the only outlet is design work.

When it is possible to swing the buyer either way, just size up the stock on hand and offer suggestions accordingly, but at the same time keep your customer's requirements in mind. Win your prospective customer's confidence and you will have easy sailing.

Then again, you run across people who do not know what they want and never will know. Do not waste all your valuable time with them if you cannot secure their order after a reasonable effort. Let them go, for they would be likely to be dissatisfied at any rate.

Often people have some fixed idea, some freak design, such as a grindstone, trowel, beer-bottle, tray and glass, or so on, or the word "Husband" on a pillow bought by the husband. Just let them explain what they want, then tell them in a nice way that the design they have in mind will not make up nicely, or the inscription is not the proper one; but if they insist, go ahead, take the order and fill to the best of your ability.

You will find that people's tastes vary a great deal, so it is a good plan to size up your customer before offering suggestions. If some party inquires as to the price of a nice lyre, or harp, do not be afraid to say $10, even if you think them only good for a five-spot; it is easy to go down. But once you have made a price stick to it, even if you lose a sale. It makes a bad impression to change your price.

When stock is scarce, naturally designs should cost more than when flowers are plentiful.

Always keep galax leaves, sheaves, cycas leaves, etc., in mind, especially when stock is scarce. All make up fine, at the same time give good satisfaction and bring in good profits.

Small designs never look like much and a spray is preferable.

Lettering never adds to the artistic effect of a piece, but often is necessary. Unless insisted upon, never put the sender's name or names on a piece, except in case of a society; then the initials and number usually will suffice. With some people lettering makes even more of a hit than the flowers. When you run across some one like this just put it on heavy.

When a piece bears some inscription such as "Brother," "Father," and so on, no card is necessary, except in case of a large family. Otherwise a card is customary. In tying on the card use a piece of baby ribbon of a color to match the flowers; do not use string or wire. If some ignorant person wants "compliments" on a card for a funeral, point his mistake out to him in a nice way. H. S.

TROUBLE WITH GERANIUMS.

I am sending a few geranium leaves which have bacteria or a fungus disease of some kind. We are almost sure what caused it. It affects our whole stock more or less, and we would like to know a cure for it. We have been using Bordeaux mixture but we don't think it is doing any good. A. & S.

The sample leaves received were badly affected with the disease commonly known as spot. There are several conditions which cause this disease to spread among geraniums. Too much moisture at the root, too frequent overhead syringing or hosing, the use of strong animal fertilizer in the soil when the plants are small, and the overdosing of them with liquid or chemical manure and water, will all tend to start this disease.

Geraniums in a young state should not be potted in a rich soil. It tends to produce a rank, soft growth and makes the plants easy victims to spot. It is also always better to rather underwater than overwater them. Bordeaux mixture is not likely to be of any value in checking the spread of the disease, which we have had on stock ourselves on several occasions. A warm, drier and more buoyant atmosphere is the best antidote. Use soot water in lieu of animal liquid fertilizers and when the plants are well rooted in the pots a pinch of some first-class chemical fertilizer, such as Clay's, will tone them up. W. N. C.

SEASONABLE SUGGESTIONS

Easter Stock.

March will be here by the time these notes appear in print and it is a reminder that the great Easter festival is drawing near, only four weeks now being left to finish up the lilies and other plants we want to have in season. You should now be able to count the buds on your lilies without pulling back the leaves. If they are still obscured from view, your chances of having them in bloom are dubious. With hard forcing we have seen them brought in flower within five weeks from the showing of the buds, but it is much better to allow them six weeks. Lose no time in removing any doubtful plants to the warmest house you have and ply the syringe or hose freely among them. Do not neglect the watering on any consideration and give them sufficient liquid stimulants to keep the foliage green and the plants vigorous.

Rambler roses should have the sprays advanced now, so that the buds can be counted; then they are all right. Astilbes, if they start to show color about March 12, will be in season. Hydrangeas should now have heads of fair size and ought to show color about the middle of the month. Azaleas may still be started and if kept warm and sprayed frequently will be in season. Keep pinching and rubbing out the early growths, which came ahead of the flowers. Acacia armata should be given 50 degrees to 55 degrees at night until the little flowers show yellow. Then keep it cooler.

Dutch bulbous stock should be put in readiness. Better start hyacinths, tulips and narcissi by March 10; they then should be in season. If lily of the valley sells well, a good supply of pips should now be potted and placed in a warm, darkened case with a brisk bottom heat. Gradually inure to light to give the plants as good foliage as possible. From three to four weeks is ample time to allow valley provided a brisk heat is at command. Lilacs, Azalea mollis, flowering cherries and other deciduous shrubs should all be in bud now and in this case will not need any further forcing. Let them open in a comparatively cool house and they will be much more satisfactory.

Cypripedium Insigne.

That old and easily grown orchid, Cypripedium insigne, is found in many commercial places and, in spite of all newer and higher priced introductions, firmly retains its position as the most popular and profitable of the cypripedium family. The present is a suitable time to overhaul any which may seem to need repotting. If the growths have become much crowded it will be better to pull the plants to pieces. If plants of moderate size are desired, 6-inch pots will be large enough. Much larger sizes are often used, but we have found the smaller pots give a larger proportion of flowers than the best specimens. A suitable compost is fibrous loam, with all the finer particles screened from it, lumpy charcoal and a little old cow manure. The pots should be half filled with clean crocks and in potting the plants should be slightly elevated above the rims. Osmunda fern fiber, with a little sphagnum, will also grow the plants well. They succeed well in a temperature of 50 degrees to 55 degrees in winter and prefer a cool house or open-air culture in summer. They appreciate an occasional application of manure water during the growing season when well rooted.

Antirrhinums.

Probably you are growing a few seedling antirrhinums on a bench in one of your houses. The flowers are useful during late winter and early spring. Well grown spikes which have been carefully disbudded make a beautiful display in large vases and, as they possess remarkable lasting properties, make a most satisfactory cut flower. Now is a good time to take some cuttings from the flowering stems of your best varieties. They will soon root and if potted off and gradually hardened can be planted outdoors early in May. From these further cuttings can be taken late in July and, if grown along in a frame or a cool house, will make fine stuff to plant on the benches about the end of September. Separate colors, like white, yellow, pink and red, will sell better than mixtures.

Gloxinias.

If gloxinias were started in flats a few weeks ago in a warm house they will have made considerable root and the young shoots will be one or two inches across. They are better potted before they get crowded. A light, moderately rich compost suits them. Equal parts of leaf-mold, loam and cow manure well dried, with a dash of powdered charcoal and sharp sand, is to their liking. Five and 6-inch pots are sufficiently large, unless the tubers are of more than ordinary size. Keep on the dry side until well rooted. Shade from direct sunshine, do not spray the leaves and keep well up to the light in a temperature of 60 degrees at night and a good many will be in bloom for Memorial day, when they will be found extremely useful.

New Range of Orchid Houses Built by the Julius Roehrs Co., Rutherford, N. J.

Sundry Reminders.

Cuttings of marguerites put in now and grown along in pots will make fine plants for flowering next Christmas.

Achimines, fancy-leaved caladiums, gesneras and tuberous-rooted begonias intended for culture indoors can be started now. Give them a light compost, water sparingly until growth appears and pot off before they crowd one another.

Memorial day is about three months away, but if you need hydrangeas at that time they should be started right away. Astilbes also should be potted and placed under the benches of any cool house or stood on a shed floor. They will make roots at once.

Such seedlings as asters, verbenas, stocks, etc., should not be kept in a warm house after they are well above ground or they soon become leggy. Keep them on a shelf well up to the glass.

DENDROBIUM X CYBELE.

Dendrobium x Cybele is one of the most beautiful and free-flowering of the many dendrobium hybrids. It is one of Veitch's seedlings, the result of a cross between D. Findlayanum and the well-known D. nobile. There is considerable confusion among the dendrobium hybrids, each hybridizer persisting in giving distinctive names to seedlings produced from the same parentage. Thus there are D. Aurora and D. Xanthocentrum, each raised by Sir Trevor Lawrence from the same cross.

Like all the deciduous dendrobes, this variety succeeds well in a basket of fern fiber and sphagnum moss. Baskets should be as small as possible and the plants through the growing season need good light with but little shade, a moist atmosphere and plenty of heat, gradually reducing the water supplies as growth is being completed and ripening up the bulbs well in a cooler and sunny house.

A NEW RACE OF DAHLIAS.

The Peony-flowered Variety.

For many years dahlias have received a large share of public favor, and every season has seen new arrivals to swell the already large ranks of named varieties. Advance has been especially noticeable in the cactus section, which has probably reached the high-water mark of popularity. The wondrous display of coloring in this class, together with their correct form, pointed petals, and graceful habit, has given them the predominant position in the great dahlia family. The last few years has seen the decline of the large show and fancy dahlias, and even the popularity of the singles and the ever useful pompons has been greatly lessened. The older type of decorative dahlias is seldom seen now, for the all-conquering cactus varieties have taken the place which once it so proudly held.

And now the boasted supremacy of the cactus group is at last threatened, and it has to meet a rival which has thrown form and symmetry to the winds, and has entered the lists clothed in nature's own freedom-loving style. To some of us, nature lovers as we are, this break is an especially pleasing one, for the new type of dahlia which has arisen can best be described as peony-flowered, for the varieties possess the irregular, loosely-arranged petals and the large golden center which we usually associate with peonies. Many of the petals are delightfully curled, and the elegant forms, and the disproportionate size of many of them, give one the pleasing idea of a natural artistry produced by breaking away from rigid and stereotyped designs.

These quaint and lovely flowers were introduced by a Dutch firm, Copyn & Son, of Groenekan, who have exhibited them at Rosendaal, Paris, Dusseldorf, etc., and have been the recipients of many medals and certificates which testify to the Continental appreciation of the new section. The horticultural press of France, Germany and Holland seems to have been captivated by the beauty of the newcomers. Needless to say, the flowers are large, and the coloring of the varieties named is good, and perhaps a brief description may be of value.

Duke Henry, soft dark red, loosely formed, and produced on long stems.

Dr. K. W. van Gorkom, a lovely variety, the white petals being softly shaded with rose.

Baron G. de Grancy, fine, long-stemmed, with a double row of creamy-white petals.

Glory of Baarn, an exquisite soft pink, fine flowers well above the foliage.

Queen Wilhelmina, a lovely flower, pure white, well arranged, and very floriferous.

Hollandia, deep rose, well recommended, fine for cutting.

Paul Kruger, white striped red, with three rows of elegant petals, on long stems.

King Leopold, a glorious soft yellow shaded with cream.

Pius X., soft yellow, freely striped with salmon; the flowers are light and graceful, very free.

Germania, wine-crimson, which sometimes is shaded with yellow; it is very effective.

Solfatara, carmine-red with a rich yellow center.

Queen Emma, a grand acquisition, large and floriferous; the color soft salmon and lilac.

Garibaldi, a rich dark scarlet, which is grand when arrayed with the daintier colors of some of the preceding.

This exhausts the list at present, but I understand the raisers have other good things in store, and if the new peony-flowered dahlias come up to expectations, they should find a place in many of our English gardens.—Gardeners' Magazine.

NARCISSI AND FUNKIAS.

Kindly give me what information you can as to growing Narcissus poeticus and Funkia cœrulea alba from seed. Does the seed germinate readily and how long will it require to bring them to blooming age? What is the proper method of handling the seedlings? J. M. G.

Raising narcissi from seed is a slow process and does not pay, except it may be in the raising of new varieties. Seed should be sown in flats of sandy loam in a cool greenhouse as soon as ripe and be transplanted either into frames or prepared beds in the open ground in spring. The little seedlings will only need one or two inches of space between them. They will need lifting when the foliage dies down and replanting in the fall. As it takes three to four years, and often much longer, to flower these seedlings, there is no profit commercially in attempting it unless, as previously stated, new hybrids are to be raised.

Narcissis poeticus produces offsets so freely that it can be increased rapidly in this way and, being so inexpensive, we do not think it would be profitable to attempt to raise it from seed.

While the various funkias, such as subcordata, Sieboldiana, ovata and others may be raised from seed, which should be sown as soon as ripe, this method is not to be recommended, as it is slow and somewhat uncertain. Division of the crowns in fall or early spring, preferably the latter, is far the better method of propagation. Use a sharp spade to cut the clumps in pieces.

JAMES GURNEY.

James Gurney, superintendent of Tower Grove park, St. Louis, Mo., is a man born with the love of gardening, inheriting his ability in this line from his father. He is an Englishman by birth, and has had much experience in the business in his native land. He began work at it at the age of 16, and was well acquainted with the late Queen Victoria. When Mr. Gurney came to this country he was 32 years of age.

Mr. Gurney has been connected with Tower Grove park ever since he came to this country. The late Henry Shaw gave this park to St. Louis, and at that time Mr. Gurney had been associated with Mr. Shaw at his country home near that city. Mr. Shaw's estate finally became the Missouri Botanic Garden, and here the results of Mr. Gurney's work are best seen. When Tower Grove park was given to St. Louis it was but natural that he who had spent years in the beautifying of it should become its superintendent. Mr. Gurney has accomplished wonders with his charge since it became part of the city. In his work he has produced new varieties of cannas, nymphæas and an excellent ageratum, named by him Stella Gurney. The prominent feature of the park is the fine collection of aquatic plants, which has received more attention and care from Mr. Gurney than anything else.

James Gurney has grown gray in the years he has spent in his chosen profession, and today is one of the foremost gardeners of the country. He continues to fill his post at Tower Grove park, and only a personal visit to the scene of his labors, such as all true gardeners and thousands in the trade delight in paying, can show the excellent results of his work.

CARNATIONS

WILD LAWSON.

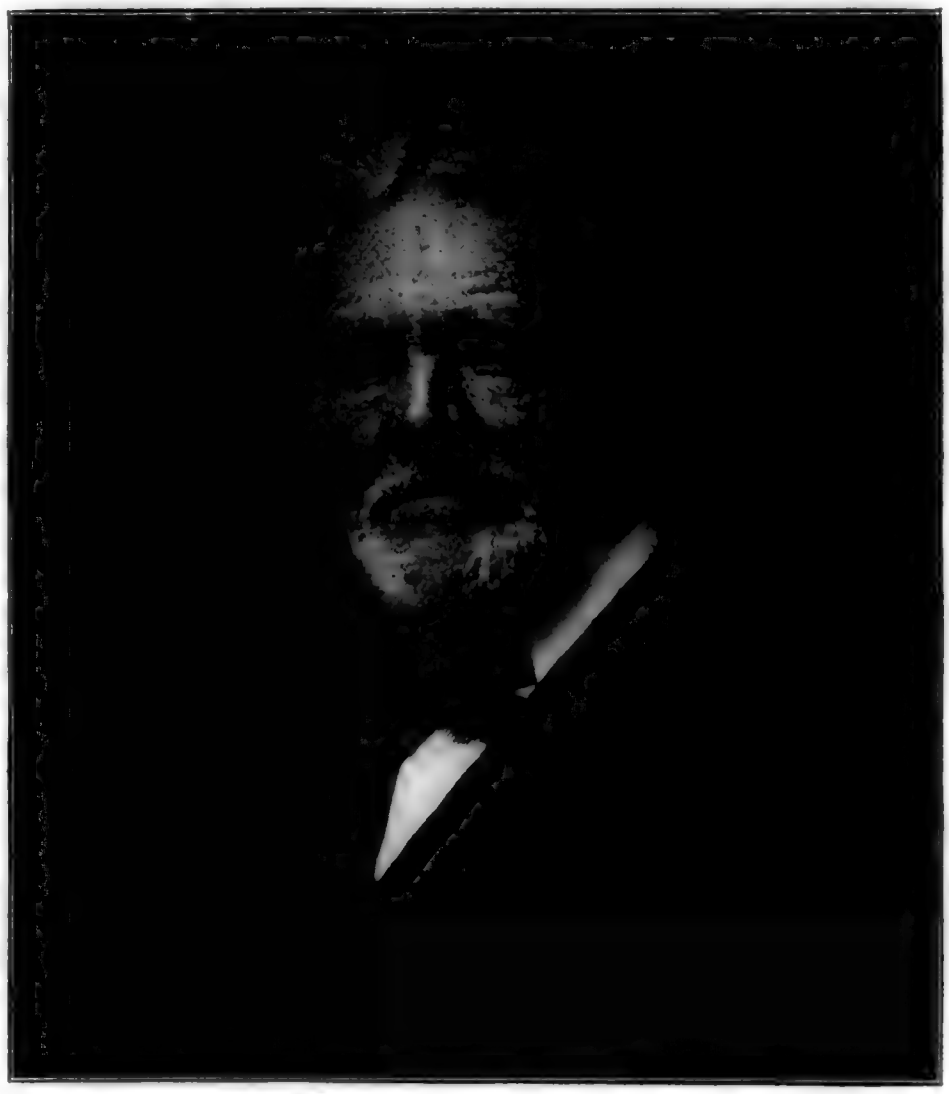
Referring to the note on "Wild Lawsons" in the Review for February 14, if when you discover a wild plant you will give it a good pruning, by cutting four or five shoots away close to the main stock, the so-called wild plant will give some fine blooms on stems twenty to twenty-four inches long.

McElhinney Bros.

SOLID BEDS VERSUS BENCHES.

I saw in the Review of February 14 an answer to a query as to whether carnations can be grown on solid beds with cinders under the soil as successfully as on raised benches. L. C. C. recommends the latter. That the sentiment in favor of raised benches is quite general among the growers of the country I would not care to deny, but I claim it is unjustly so and that it will decrease as time goes on. We have for five years been growing our carnations on solid beds and we do not have to blush when our stock is set up beside that of other growers. When we first changed, our stock was as good as it had ever been, if not better, and it has improved in accordance with the improvement in the varieties just as much as the stock of other growers has. Our stock has never gone begging. So much for the quality that such beds will produce.

As to the crops being more tardy, I say there is nothing in it. It is almost entirely a question of what kind of a start your plants get after they are benched. If the plants suffer from transplanting, the early crop will be scant and poor and the winter crop will start off with less vigor and will be late, regardless of the style of bench you use. On the other hand, if you get your plants established in good shape and the topping has been done right, blooming will begin at once and will increase in volume, according to the vigor of your plants, regardless of the style of the bench. A few days ago one of our best local growers visited our establishment. I first showed him through some houses which had been giving a heavy cut since October, and which are beginning to show the effects, whereupon he expressed the opinion that he liked raised benches better, but when a little later I showed him a lot that were planted later and were then right in the height of the crop he did not think that raised benches could do any better. Another incident occurred a few seasons ago, and it was a fair sample of what happens frequently. A local grower saw our carnations on these beds and concluded it was the proper thing and he would change his beds as fast as they needed rebuilding, but he would try it first in a limited way, as I advised him to do. The next summer he tore out the south bench in a house that had a side wall four and one-half feet high. Instead of filling in with cinders he filled in with old bench soil, which was quite sandy. With the poor drainage and the shade from the wall of course he had no success, and condemned that style of bed. There are a great many growers who are not so unreasonable as the one mentioned, but who nevertheless are prejudiced, and unless a thing will stand head and shoulders above another they refuse to see its merits.



After five years we would not think of changing back to the raised bench. We may some day be able to improve on these cinder beds, however.

LIGHT AND SHADE ON PLANTS.

[A paper by H. Hasselbring, of the University of Chicago, read before the annual convention of the Illinois State Florists' Association at Bloomington, February 19, 1907.]

Much of our scientific work of the present day is done with a direct view to its bearing on the practical affairs of the world. Another phase of science is concerned primarily in the search for truth and the addition of facts to human knowledge. Of this type of work often the immediate advantage is not obvious, especially since most of its ways and methods are beyond the comprehension of the onlookers. Yet pure science work is a necessary precursor of applied science. Again, in the course of purely scientific investigations, we often meet with facts, which when properly analyzed throw considerable light on questions of practical importance. Or at least give us suggestions and new ideas for further experimentation.

The Plant's Relation to Light.

A question that has received much commentation in recent years is that of the advisability of shading plants, like roses and carnations, in greenhouses in summer. Some hold that all shade is not only superfluous, but even injurious, while others maintain that shade of some kind is necessary at least during the bright months. To arrive at a clear understanding of the problem let us consider the plant in its relation to light.

About fifty per cent of the dry weight of plants is carbon. All of the carbon is obtained from the atmosphere, which contains about 2.94 parts per 10,000 by volume; i. e., in 10,000 cubic feet of air there are about three cubic feet of carbon dioxid. The carbon dioxid is taken into the green parts of plants, mostly the leaves, and is there worked over into organic matter. This process, however, takes place only in the light. The energy for the chemical transformations of the carbon dioxid into starch and sugar in the leaves under natural conditions is furnished entirely by the sunlight. Very feeble light is sufficient to cause the process of carbon assimilation to begin. The rate of assimilation increases with intensity of illumination until a certain maximum of illumination is reached, after which no further increase of assimilation is observed. Keeping this in mind, that the amount of carbon dioxid in the atmosphere is exceedingly small, and that sunlight is the chief factor concerned in its assimilation, I will now give the results of some recent work of two English investigators, Brown and Escombe, bearing on the question of the influence of intensity of illumination on the assimilation of plants.

Some Interesting Experiments.

It is not necessary to go into the details of the manipulations except to say that the leaves while still attached to the plants were enclosed in air-tight glass cases through which a stream of air was drawn by means of tubes. By determining the amount of carbon dioxid in the entering and also in the outgoing air, it is an easy matter by subtraction to determine the amount assimilated by the leaf.

In the first place, it was found that when leaves were shaded by a thin cloth screen the assimilatory process always responded to an artificial increase in the amount of carbon dioxid in the air entering the case. In other words, even when the illumination was reduced the plant was still able to assimilate more carbon dioxid than is normally present in the air. That is to say that even with moderate illumination the amount of light which a plant receives is still in excess of the amount which the leaf requires with the normal carbon dioxid content of the air.

In the second place, another series of experiments was carried out by Brown and Escombe in which they determined directly the amount of carbon dioxid assimilated by shaded leaves. In this case the leaves of the ordinary nasturtium, Tropæolum majus, a sun-loving plant, were used. The leaves to be experimented upon, while still attached to the plant, were enclosed in a square case with glass sides as before. These leaves were exposed under a screen which cut out about two-thirds of the solar radiation. By a very ingenious method a known portion of the remainder of the light was cut out. This was effected by means of revolving discs from which radial sectors had been cut. If a disc from which, for instance, one-half of the area had been cut away was revolved over the leaf it is evident that only one-half of the light can reach the leaf. The following table gives the amounts of carbon dioxid assimilated per hour per unit surface of leaf under different strengths of illumination. It must be kept in mind that all the leaves were under a canvas screen which cut out about two-thirds of the light which was then further reduced by the revolving sectors.

	Temperature of leaf case, degrees F.	Carbon dioxid assimilated per decimeter of leaf surface per hour (cubic centimeters.)	Percentage of increase or decrease in reduced illumination.
Exp. 1—
A. Full illumination under screen.....	71	1.692
B. Half illumination under screen.....	69	2.029	19 increase
Exp. 2—
A. Full illumination under screen.....	69	1.919
B. Half illumination under screen.....	67	2.047	14 increase
Exp. 3—
A. Full illumination under screen.....	75	1.926
B. Quarter illumination under screen.....	72	1.311	3 decrease

It will be seen from this that when two-thirds of the illumination was cut off by a screen and one-half of the remainder was cut off by the revolving sectors the amount of carbon dioxid assimilation was not decreased but was even slightly increased. Not until three-fourths of the light coming through the screen was cut off was there any reduction in assimilation. This means that one-sixth of the light of a clear summer sky is still sufficient for the needs of our ordinary plants and not until the light is reduced to about one-twelfth do they begin to suffer.

Now I wish to correlate with these experiments another set of observations and experiments from an entirely different source, but having a bearing on this subject.

Schander's Experiments.

The use of Bordeaux mixture as a fungicide is well known. The spraying of plants such as apple trees, potatoes, grapes and others is a matter of common practice. Soon after the use of Bordeaux mixture became general it was observed that the mixture had secondary effects on plants not due to its fungicidal action. The plants thus sprayed remained green and retained their leaves longer than unsprayed plants. The leaves were of a deeper color and thicker than those of unsprayed plants. This was a matter of common observation both in this country and in Europe. Much work was done to determine the cause of this effect, and it was generally attributed to the stimulating action of the mixture. Recently the whole subject has been investigated by Schander, a German investigator, whose results I will give briefly.

After eliminating by careful experimentation the possible stimulating effects of the various ingredients of the mixture, Schander turned his attention to the effect of the coating itself. It is evident that the coat of lime and copper sulphate on the leaves would cut out a large part of the light reaching the interior of the leaf and thus act as a shade.

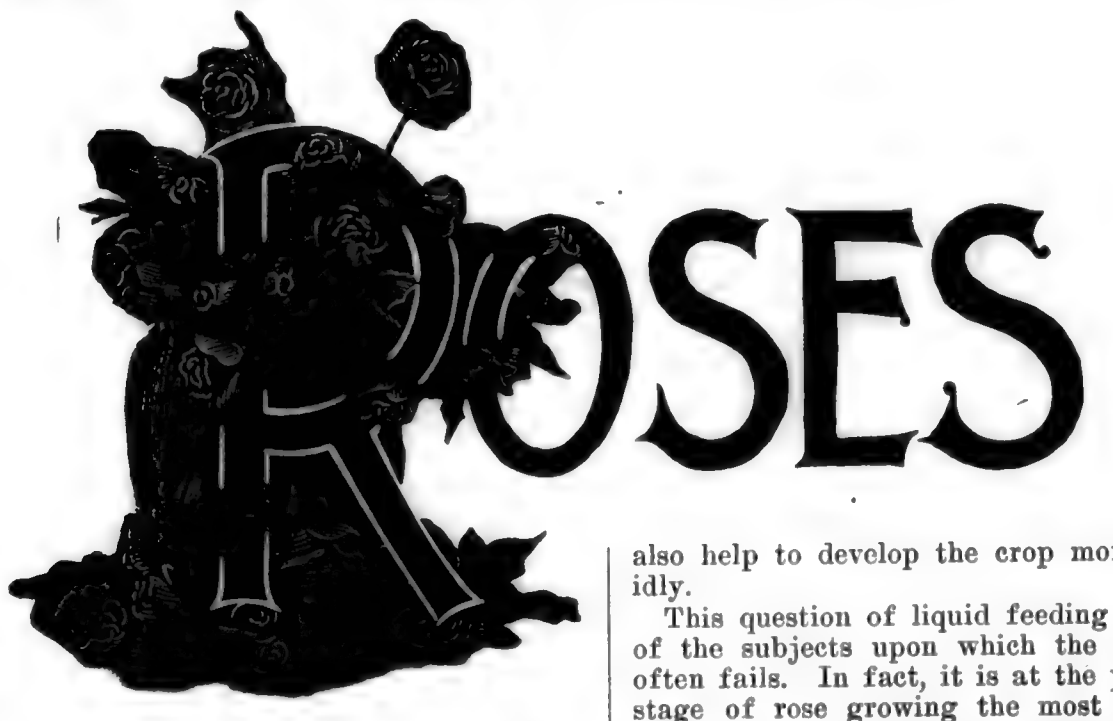
In the first experiment three sets of bean plants were planted in the open ground and covered with glass in such a way that the framework supporting the glass left the sides open to the air. One set of plants was sprayed with Bordeaux mixture, in the second set the glass was sprayed, giving the shade effect, and the third was left untreated under clear glass. During the entire development of the plants both the plants under the sprayed glass and those whose foliage has been sprayed directly showed a deeper green color with larger leaves and better growth. The unshaded plants showed the yellowish color characteristic of plants suffering from too much light. Of course, the temperature and moisture conditions were the same for each group.



In another case the leaves of grapes were sprayed with the Bordeaux, partly on the upper side and partly on the lower surface. If the beneficial effects of the spray resulted from the chemical action of the mixture both sets of leaves ought to act alike. It was found, however, that the leaves sprayed on the upper surface alone showed beneficial results. These were of a deeper green and contained a larger quantity of starch than the others.

In a later experiment parts of leaves were covered with chemically indifferent substances like thin paper. The covered portions always showed a deeper green color and contained more starch than the exposed parts. These experiments seem to show that the beneficial effects of Bordeaux mixture aside from its fungicidal properties are due to its action in moderating the intense illumination of the summer sun.

Conclusions Reached.

From the observations and experiments which I have reported here we must arrive at the remarkable conclusion that during the bright weather from late spring until early fall most of our cultivated plants suffer from too intense an illumination. When this illumination is cut down, as in all plants which are commonly sprayed, the plants thrive better than in full sunlight. This is commonly observed in apple trees, grape vines, potatoes and other plants which are commonly sprayed.

In the greenhouses the situation is complicated by the great rise in temperature which becomes injurious to plants, but aside from this the illumination itself can easily become injurious. Shade-loving plants like palms, etc., are injured even by long exposure to moderate illumination and roses soon show signs of injury in bright summer weather. The first and most evident sign of too intense illumination is a pale green or yellowish color. Finally the leaves formed become smaller and none of the tissues manufacture the normal amount of starch. This soon results in weaker growth and slender shoots on the plants. In roses the effect of too much light can be easily seen in summer by the pale green leaves. Even a few days of cloudy weather will suffice to change the appearance of the whole house to a more normal, darker green.

FEEDING FOR EASTER BLOOMS.

It is now only a few weeks till Easter and any crops that seem tardy and backward should receive special attention so that they may come up to time.

With the increase of sunshine, which we may now expect, there is less danger of weakening stock by feeding and, if it is in vigorous condition, the risk of doing damage by a judicious rise in temperature, both at night and in the daytime, is reduced. Houses which are coming along too slowly can, without any danger, be raised from 3 degrees to 4 degrees at night, with a corresponding rise during the day, so long as ventilation can be freely indulged in. Generous applications of liquid feeding will also help to develop the crop more rapidly.

This question of liquid feeding is one of the subjects upon which the grower often fails. In fact, it is at the present stage of rose growing the most important, even to experts; for how many of them really know just what ingredients they are administering to their plants and in what proportion? Neither do they know what the chemical admixture will result in, food or poison. As a result many are the failures, illustrating the old adage that "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing."

The information conveyed in such essays as that read at the American Rose Society's meeting in Boston last year by Mr. Pray on liquid fertilizers must, if given serious study by the student of rose culture, result in shedding light in many dark places. And, as I mentioned in my notes of last week, the credit of all this work is due to the American Rose Society, to the energy and determination of its officers and to the moral support given by its members.

The meeting of last year was the most successful in its history. In the character and quality of its exhibits, its premiums and in the practical, scientific and everyday character of the essays it will be hard to surpass. Yet we are not dead to the pleasures of hope.

The premiums offered this season are numerous and valuable; the essayists are men of national repute in their different pursuits; the questions for discussion are of the greatest importance to every grower, dealer or lover of roses; the lessons to be learned will undoubtedly add to our profits, the brotherly feeling thus engendered will keep a warm glow in our hearts for, at least, one year when we can again renew it at the next annual meeting. All of which will redound to the honor and glory of our enthroned queen. Ribes.

CUTS AND CONDITIONS.

About how many flowers per plant can reasonably be expected from roses of the ordinary varieties?

Are solid beds an advantage over raised benches for roses when it is desired to grow stock two or three years without replanting? With a rather sandy soil will the usual layer of broken stone or cinders beneath the beds be necessary for drainage?

In a climate that is usually quite sunny in the winter will not north and south houses be as favorable for producing good results as east and west houses?

Will a rather sandy soil, but which is rich and productive, be good for roses? Roses grown outdoors in this soil make splendid growth, bloom well and seem to be healthy. W. H. C.

The average cut from the different varieties depends so much on the attending conditions, such as soil, climate, aspect and character of house, that it is an almost impossible task to estimate anywhere near what they will do. Brides and Maids in a well constructed, well heated and well watered house under skillful care will produce, on an average during the season, twenty-seven to thirty blooms of all grades. Hybrid teas, such as Liberty, Meteor and Richmond, will, under like conditions, produce at least one-fourth more. Beauties will be doing well if the average is in the vicinity of seventeen.

When roses are to be carried over without transplanting, solid beds are certainly preferable to table benches. The writer last spring, in March, had the opportunity of inspecting some houses of roses in the vicinity of Boston, which were then in their third year. These were on solid beds. The varieties were Liberty, Maid and Bride and finer roses it would be hard to meet. The grower was even then contemplating running them another season.

If the subsoil is of a very sandy nature there should be no necessity for any kind of artificial drainage.

My experience, and the experience of many good growers of my acquaintance, is that north and south houses are better suited for summer, fall and spring crops and that they usually fail to produce paying crops during the winter solstice, when prices are at their best.

The ideal soil for roses is a good fibrous loam with an admixture of clay. Where the soil is of a sandy nature it will require to be frequently enriched, either by mulching or by liquid feeding. Under such conditions roses grafted on Manetti stocks will be preferable to own root stock, the fine roots of the Manetti being better fitted to use this class of food than the apparently stronger, more robust members of own root stock. Although stock may do exceedingly well outdoors in certain soils, it is quite a different question when it is compelled to find sustenance from the same soil on benches under glass. RIBES.

SOUTHERN ROSES UNDER GLASS.

[A paper by R. Lockerbie, New Orleans, read before the Society of Southern Florists, at the New Orleans Convention, February 14 to 16, 1907.]

The growing of roses under glass in the south has only within the last decade begun to claim earnest attention. Previous to that time, the few spasmodic efforts in different sections resulted in only indifferent success. Now that the requirements of the rose are better understood, the amount of glass devoted to its culture is enormously increased, and the results, in most cases, are more than satisfactory. While we here aim at the same goal as our northern brethren, we shoot from an entirely different angle. The theory of rose growing is the same, both north and south, but the difficulties are much opposed.

Style of House.

The style of house for the south is one of the first considerations. I prefer an even-span north and south house, to any other. Such a house has the great advantage over an east and west house of being much cooler, while giving practically the same amount of light.

Each house should be detached and have ventilators in the walls on each side, as well as on both sides of the ridge. The ventilators at the ridge should also be considerably deeper than those in use in the north, and I find those that are hinged at the top preferable to those hinged at the bottom, especially during the heavy rains we experience in the summer months.

The tendency now leans towards using larger glass, but here, where we are blessed with plenty of sunshine, glass 16x24 inches, glazed the 16-inch way, seems to me to fill the bill.

Air or sun-dried cypress is the best material for sashbars, and a most important feature is to have the inside drip gutter large enough to carry off the water. Should a single post happen to sink even a quarter of an inch an annoying overflow is the result.

Beds or Benches.

Raised solid beds or benches can both be used, but neither should be over four feet wide. Raised solid beds should have at least one foot of rough drainage in the bottom, covered with sod laid grass side down. Four to six inches more will leave plenty of room for soil and subsequent mulching. When benches are used, 6-inch pecky cypress boards, one or one and one-half inches thick, are the best material. These should be laid so as to leave a space of one inch between each board to provide thoroughly for drainage. Where 8-inch or 9-inch boards are used, at least two inches should be allowed between them. Before filling, these spaces can be covered with a thin sod, grass side down, which will make the drainage system ideal. The surface of all woodwork should have an application of hot lime wash, to get rid of all insect life and also for a preservative for the wood. Crude oil is also good in this connection. Provide walks of twenty-two to twenty-four inches around each bed, and sufficient hydrants in every walk to enable the grower to sprinkle clear to the ends of the beds.

Whether steam or hot water is used for heating, the pipes should be so arranged and valved as to provide for just the necessary amount of heat for each separate occasion.

Soil and Its Preparation.

Now comes the vital question of soil and its preparation. This is the keystone to the whole position. In general it may be said that soil that will grow good farm crops, such as corn, wheat or oats, will be found suitable for roses. The soil, so far as I have seen it in the south, seems well adapted for raising good roses. The chief defect, in my estimation, is the lack of suitable fiber in it. While plenty of soil can be had with fiber, it is so chock full of undesirable grasses, of which the omnipresent Bermuda is the worst, that it is better to take a soil from which some crop has been raised during the summer and prepare it as follows:

In the late fall plough it up, pulverize it fine with a drag harrow and sow rather thickly with English rye grass, orchard grass or some other equally quick growing grass. By early spring this will have made a thick sod with plenty of fibrous roots, when it should again be ploughed up. Now apply about two inches of cow manure to the surface and work it well in with a disk-harrow. An occasional harrowing will keep it in good shape until needed, or it may be piled up and turned over a few times. This working will put it in fine condition for planting.

When turning the soil and filling the benches a sharp lookout must be kept for grubworms, the larvæ of the May beetle. Every one that escapes you means the loss of a rose plant before the summer is over.

Filling the Benches.

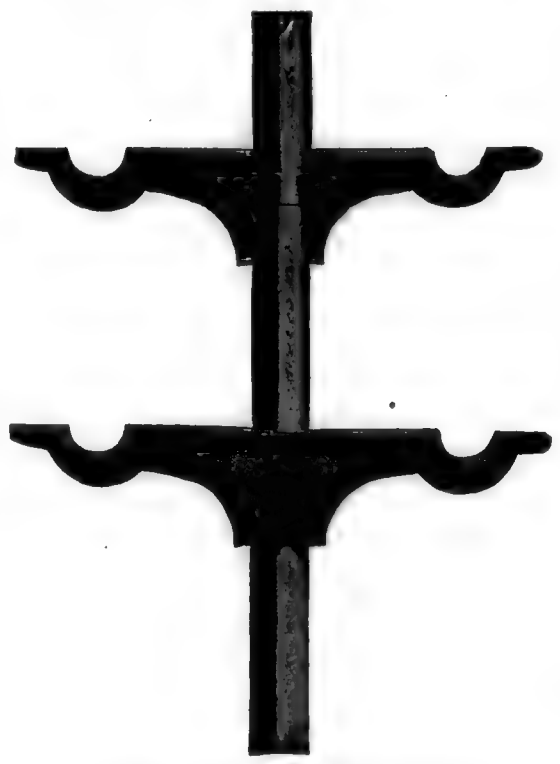
Before filling the benches clear out all rubbish from underneath, and give each house a thorough fumigating with sulphur. With one man at a bench leveling off and two or three wheeling in the soil, the work of filling the houses goes merrily on. Each bench should be filled just barely level, so that after a firming and watering the soil will be about one inch from the top of the sides. I may here say that five inches is deep enough for the benches. When a house has been filled the walks and underneath the benches should again be carefully cleaned. In rose growing cleanliness is godliness.

Before planting, the benches should have a top dressing of ground bone, about fifty pounds to 500 square feet of surface, and well worked into the soil with the hands or a rake. The standard distance for planting is ten inches in and fifteen inches between the rows; but rank growers, like Beauties and Chatenays, can be planted wider to advantage.

Propagating.

It is always preferable to propagate your own stock of young roses, but the law of selection must be rigidly observed. It is a simple thing to let a good strain deteriorate by indiscriminate propagation, and only judicious selection will keep the stock up to the top notch. Cuttings may be made from blind wood, as well as from flowering shoots. A heel cutting from blind wood will make a very satisfactory plant in a short time, as it throws up a number of shoots from the bottom and thus makes a splendid foundation for future building. January and February are the best months to root the cuttings.

A temperature of 60 degrees to 62 degrees in the sand and 56 degrees in the house at night will be found suitable to their requirements, and in about twenty-five days the cuttings should be rooted enough for potting. Use small pots for the first potting, with little manure in the soil, and keep the young plants growing all the time, using richer soil for each shift. Cuttings struck in January should be strong plants by May 1.



Buying Young Stock.

Just a word about buying young roses from the north. There is plenty of fine stock in season in northern markets, but, alas, the conditions down here are either unknown or ignored by a great many shippers. Young roses for shipment to the south must never be pot-bound at time of shipping, and they must be wet enough to arrive in a nice, moist condition. Pot-bound plants generally arrive denuded of foliage, and those which come too dry soon drop theirs, and the buyer loses at least a month in their best growing period; indeed, he is lucky if he does not lose half the plants as well. These are two points in shipping that purchasers should insist be observed.

NOTHING WRONG IN KANSAS.

The accompanying illustration is from a photograph of Charles P. Mueller's new greenhouses at Wichita, Kan. They were erected two years ago and enlarged last summer. The plant now contains about 30,000 square feet of glass and is devoted to roses, carnations and the general line of stuff used in a first-class retail trade. Considerable space is given up to bedding plants, in which Mr. Mueller does a large business during the bedding season. A. Marquart, for many years with J. F. Wilcox, of Council Bluffs, is in charge. Credit is due him for the showing he has made during the six or seven months he has been with the establishment.

A NEW GREENHOUSE BRACKET.

In a large proportion of the greenhouses there is need for some sort of a bracket fastened upon the pipes which support the roof. Where the heating pipes are carried overhead a pipe hanger is essential and the economy of space often calls for the use of brackets upon which shelves may be placed to carry considerable weight. The bracket shown in the accompanying illustration is used by a large number of New England growers. It is manufactured by Buxton & Allard, Nashua, N. H., and has made its way so far west that the C. C. Pollworth Co., Milwaukee, has taken it up as general western sales agent. It is said that the iron brackets, when properly clamped to the pipes, will each carry a load of over a ton.

CRINUM YEMENSE.

Growers in general are well aware of the merits of Crinum Moorei, C. Powelli, and C. longifolium, plants that have been in cultivation for a long time, but the Arabian form of C. latifolium, says a writer in the Gardeners' Magazine, is wholly overlooked, despite its proved hardiness, compact growth, and giant inflorescences out of all proportion to the small size of the plants.

It belongs to the deciduous section, carrying little or no leafage in its native habitat of Yemen for longer than half the year. Under cultivation, it fits the English seasons admirably, growing throughout summer, flowering in August, and resting quietly throughout winter. The bulb is as round as an onion, with little or no neck, the leafage is two feet long and high, broad, and, in some measure, handsome also. The flowers rival those of any hardy crinum in magnificence, being pure white, six inches across the perianth, expanding fully, and average twenty in each umbel. The inflorescence is about a foot across, and not more than thirty inches high, being but slightly raised above the foliage. It makes a delightful pot plant for the cool greenhouse, thrives apace in the warm border quite unprotected, and gives no trouble at any time. I have grown the plant for eight years, and in some quantity, and can recommend it for its refinement, compact habit, and sweet fragrance. It flowers regularly about August, and every bulb throws a strong scape. C. latifolium has long been noted as the best of the large-flowered crinums for the temperate house, and its variety Yemense is equally as good a plant for the garden proper in everything save size.

STAGING EXHIBITIONS.

The German Arrangement.

The accompanying illustration from a photograph of the autumn flower show given in Stuttgart, Germany, November 10 to 15, 1906, is extremely interesting when compared with illustrations of our American exhibitions. Unfortunately I have no information covering the arrangement and, therefore, we are compelled to call upon our imagination as to the object and scope of the undertaking.

Evidently competition of exhibits—the main incentive of our exhibitions—is eliminated and an effort to lay before the flower-loving public a grand, formal floral display is apparent. Extreme formality is ever present and each vase or boxed plant has its counterpart placed with mathematical precision in a balanced scale.

The whole flower space, 85x200 feet, is laid out into a formal garden, the beds in balanced pairs and evidently bordered by narrow wooden strips. Each plant or group is neatly and inconspicuously labeled and at the rear, where there appears to be a rustic bridge leading to a mysterious "somewhere," the directing signs are enclosed in rustic frames.

The whole arrangement shows a premeditated study of formal effects by a master mind and, as seen from an end balcony, must have been an interesting sight. W. C. EGAN.

GERMAN IRISES.

[An extract from an address by J. Woodward Manning, delivered before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, January 12, 1907.]

The iris, or as popularly known the fleur de lis, rainbow-flower or poorman's orchid, etc., has more than 170 described pure species, of which about 100 have been cultivated at times by American horticulturists while somewhat more than 130 species are grown by English iris fanciers, among which, however, a portion fail to combine sufficient distinction, beauty or ease of culture to warrant their extended use. While, however, perhaps less than a hundred species are to be recommended for cultivation in American or particularly New England gardens, this is but a fraction of the number of varieties which by selection or cross fertilization have been produced and contribute most advantageously to garden ornamentation.

The surface rhizomed forms are more popularly known as German irises, though the true Iris Germanica is but one of many species. The dwarf forms are greatly neglected, being but seldom seen in American gardens, yet possessing great merit in their range of bloom and the earliness of flowering period. Iris pumilla is better known than the other species and growing about nine inches high bears in April showy flowers of deep purple in profusion. As an edging plant it has much merit and there are various selected varieties ranging from pearly white, through clear blues to the deeper colored typical form. Iris pumilla is certainly worthy of far greater use than has been the case in the past. I. verna, another dwarf species from the Carolinas is equally dwarf, quite prolific in bloom with purple shades and blooms about the same time. This does not show the improvement and fixed forms, however, that is true with the last species. The gem among dwarf irises, however, is the crested Iris cristata, only growing about six inches high with light green foliage. It forms a carpet of verdure and bears freely of light blue flowers beautifully blotched with golden yellow. I know no form of dwarf iris with as great adaptability of uses as this either for naturalizing or for varied garden usage.

The whole arrangement shows a premeditated study of formal effects by a master mind and, as seen from an end balcony, must have been an interesting sight. W. C. EGAN.

GERMAN IRISES.

[An extract from an address by J. Woodward Manning, delivered before the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, January 12, 1907.]

The iris, or as popularly known the fleur de lis, rainbow-flower or poorman's orchid, etc., has more than 170 described pure species, of which about 100 have been cultivated at times by American horticulturists while somewhat more than 130 species are grown by English iris fanciers, among which, however, a portion fail to combine sufficient distinction, beauty or ease of culture to warrant their extended use. While, however, perhaps less than a hundred species are to be recommended for cultivation in American or particularly New England gardens, this is but a fraction of the number of varieties which by selection or cross fertilization have been produced and contribute most advantageously to garden ornamentation.

The surface rhizomed forms are more popularly known as German irises, though the true Iris Germanica is but one of many species. The dwarf forms are greatly neglected, being but seldom seen in American gardens, yet possessing great merit in their range of bloom and the earliness of flowering period. Iris pumilla is better known than the other species and growing about nine inches high bears in April showy flowers of deep purple in profusion. As an edging plant it has much merit and there are various selected varieties ranging from pearly white, through clear blues to the deeper colored typical form. Iris pumilla is certainly worthy of far greater use than has been the case in the past. I. verna, another dwarf species from the Carolinas is equally dwarf, quite prolific in bloom with purple shades and blooms about the same time. This does not show the improvement and fixed forms, however, that is true with the last species. The gem among dwarf irises, however, is the crested Iris cristata, only growing about six inches high with light green foliage. It forms a carpet of verdure and bears freely of light blue flowers beautifully blotched with golden yellow. I know no form of dwarf iris with as great adaptability of uses as this either for naturalizing or for varied garden usage.

For perfect hardihood, freedom of bloom and range of color we can with the dwarf and taller growing German irises feel quite independent of the more difficult forms, however. The German iris, as popularly known, varies in growth in the varied forms from fifteen to forty inches. The earlier varieties commence blooming in early May, and by a careful selection of kinds it is possible to keep up a succession of flowers until late June.

Iris Florentina, the orris root of commerce, is one of the most popular, and deservedly so, for over a hundred years it has occupied a conspicuous position in every large New England garden and during the period has lost none of its popularity. Free blooming, with flowers of pearly whiteness, it annually leads the way to the charms of the early summer garden flowers. There are three forms, the common type just described, the variety Albicans, of a purer white, and Princess of Wales, even more floriferous, with slightly longer flowers and the most deliciously fragrant of any German iris.

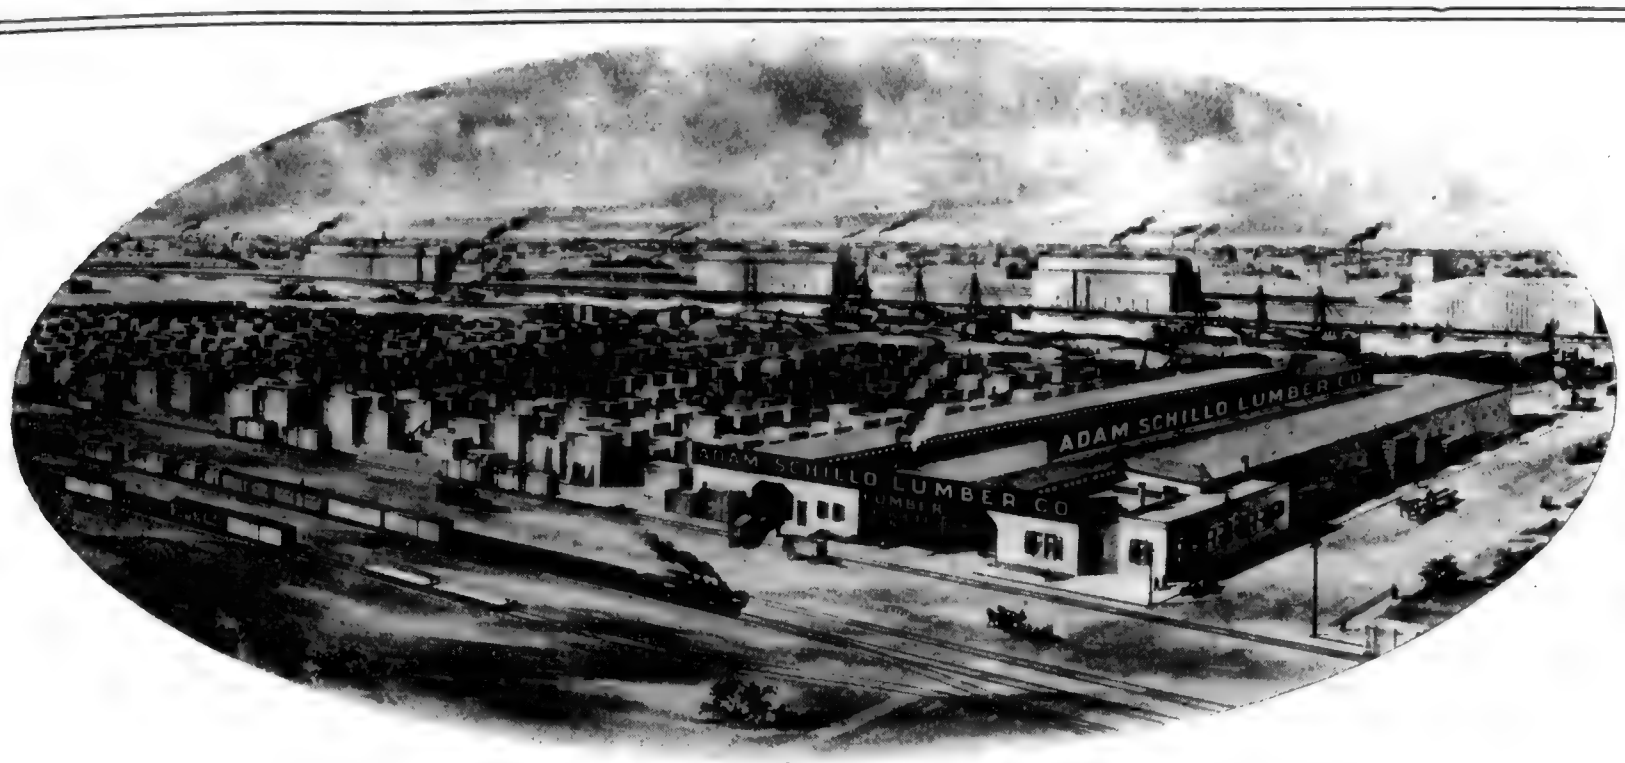
The crowning beauty of all German irises is traceable to the blood of Iris pallida, the broadest leaved of all, with sword-like foliage often attaining a height of two and one-half feet and an inch and a half across the blade. The flowers are borne on long stems bearing these flowers well above the foliage, altogether producing a most charming effect. The variety Dalmatica, or sometimes known as Princess Beatrice and occasionally in this country as Madam Almyra, is the finest, with immense flowers of a rich lavender blue and with a charming though subtle fragrance. Delicata is of weaker growth, with falls lavender, shading to white and French gray standards. Hybridizing has not improved this species.

The varieties of German iris mentioned are but a fraction of those that can be purchased from horticultural sources; they represent, however, the best, and among them are varieties far advanced in horticultural merit over many of the more common varieties seen. Of clear yellow German irises we have two species, flavescens and aurea; both are good, the former attaining a height of three feet, with lemon yellow flowers, and the latter of dwarfer growth, with rich golden yellow flowers.

All of these irises with surface rhizomes are of the easiest cultivation, thriving in ordinary garden soils, requiring subdivision and replanting in reenriched soils as their clumps become large or the soil becomes exhausted. This replanting should be done as soon as the foliage shows signs of ripening and must not be delayed so long that they may not become thoroughly reestablished in the soil before winter. In planting it is better not to sink the rhizomes over an inch below the surface unless the situation is naturally a very dry one. As the plants become established, the rhizome soon assumes its proper elevation. Until of late few diseases troubled this class. Unfortunately, however, a seemingly microbic rot is found to affect the roots so that the foliage becomes detached from the rhizome. The disease is little understood and no remedy has been proved effective, though it is quite possible that over-richness of soil may serve to foster the disease.

PECKY CYPRESS.

It has been the good fortune of the growers in the vicinity of Chicago to discover a great many ways of saving money which have since come to be of recognized value to all growers. The ridge and furrow greenhouse without partition walls, and the iron gutter, may be accepted as Chicago ideas, but no one thing promises to make so much money for so many small growers, as well as large, as the Chicago discovery that pecky cypress is the best bench material wherever wood is used. And by the same token, the Louisiana cypress mills owe no small debt to the circumstance which caused Bassett & Washburn to first try pecky cypress, for the price of the wood has advanced about fifty per cent since that time.



It is generally conceded that the first pecky cypress to be used in greenhouse benches went into a house at Hinsdale, twelve or fourteen years ago. It looked so bad that there was no great enthusiasm manifested, but Mr. Washburn was just then closing out the business of E. Washburn & Son, dealers in hard woods, and had no sale for the pecky cypress which was carried for the makers of cheap caskets. However, it was soon seen that the benches of ill-looking cypress were outlasting those of the handsomest hemlock. Since that time nothing but pecky cypress has been used for benches at Hinsdale, and as a matter of fact Mr. Washburn says that original lot is still in use on the place. When the wood was as yet unknown to the trade, visitors would poke all kinds of fun at the worm-eaten boards they were putting into the benches and occasionally someone would take out his knife and try to poke a hole through one of the new benches to show how poor they were. If he poked hard enough he broke his knife. At any rate, the lumber always proved to be a good deal better than it appeared. Prior to this time about its only sale had been to those who did not care how their packing cases looked.

Peter Reinberg was the second Chicago grower to become impressed with the fact that there might be something about pecky cypress it would pay a grower to know. It was not a case of someone trying to sell him something; he asked the Adam Schillo Lumber Co., where he was in the habit of buying, for it and they had to send to Louisiana for him. When it came, Mr. Reinberg was not especially impressed by its appearance, but he put it in a few benches built that year. As a result he now has several carloads on the place, ready for use this spring, and the quantity he has used all told would equal a big trainload. Although the price has risen steadily, year after year, the first cost is still less than hemlock, and the cypress lasts much longer, possibly several times as long.

There is not a day but what brings its visitors to the big plants about Chicago, so it wasn't long until pecky cypress was in strong request. The Schillo Lumber Co. is reported to have estimated its sales for this spring at over 750,000 feet. This is not all for growers for the Chicago market, as they ship it all over the country.

An Average sample of Pecky Cypress, the most Enduring Wood for Greenhouse Benches.

The Schillo Establishment, where Pecky Cypress has Become a Leading Specialty.

Pecky cypress is like any other cypress except that it looks as though it were full of worm holes, but isn't; it is especially like other cypress in that it has to be open air dried in the south. It is dried until it weighs three pounds to the board foot, or 3,000 pounds to the thousand feet. Consequently 10,000 feet will make a minimum car. The Schillo Lumber Co. had cars shipped direct from the mills in Louisiana to florists in New England and to growers in the far west, and it is only a question of time when all growers will use it. If the local lumber yard won't carry it, so that a few hundred feet can be had when wanted, growers can club together and get in a car.

But it doesn't take so very many feet of bench to call for a minimum car of pecky cypress. It comes 1x6 inches and the boards eight, twelve or sixteen feet long, so they will just reach the cross-pieces with posts set four feet apart. With about an inch between for drainage, a bench four feet wide will take seven boards, or three and one-half feet lumber measure for each lineal foot of bench. Side pieces bring it up to four and one-half feet. Consequently a minimum car, 10,000 feet of lumber, would suffice for only twenty-two benches 4x 100. The average car contains 13,000 to 15,000 feet.

The REVIEW has several times called attention to pecky cypress as meriting a trial by all greenhouse owners for comparison with hemlock and has urged the selling agency, which markets the output of the cypress mills, to arrange so that any grower could buy in moderate quantities, as a basis for building up a profitable trade in this long neglected product of the southern forests. It is promised that something soon may be doing along these lines, for it is reported that one mill now has 800,000 feet of 1x6 pecky boards on hand.

PACKING FOR SHIPMENT.

[In a discussion of special express rates before the Society of Southern Florists at the New Orleans Convention, C. W. Eichling concluded with a few words on packing.]

As regards proper packing, this subject treated in detail would fill a book, and I shall confine myself to pointing out a few advantages and abuses in packing. In the proper packing of plants a number of things have to be considered, and it is as difficult to teach packing by a lecture as it is to cure a disease by correspondence. Experience, practice and good judgment are the only teachers, and here is where the necessity comes in of a young man to learn his trade under an experienced foreman.

A Recent Experience.

With an order before you in the packing shed, look at the nature of the shipment and the distance it has to travel. Then pick out a box of proper size and strength. Too often unnecessary charges are paid on boxes entirely too large and heavy for the contents. I have here a striking example of how not to do it, and when this box arrived I called in several brother florists to witness the weight, style of packing and condition of contents. The box was received with a few small palms, primulas, Lorraine begonias and cyclamens valued at $10.95. The box and paper alone weighed eighty-three pounds; the entire weight was 180 pounds; express charges $6.12, at special rate, while the plants were worth, as above stated, $10.95.

On opening the monster we found that the plants had slipped through the cleats, and we pulled out a mess of paper, root balls, broken Lorraines and primulas, with enough of mashed cyclamen to complete the limit. What we had to show for our $17 was hardly worth 17 cents, except the box, which is good for years to come. We complained to the shipper, stating all the facts, and expressed our belief that he was ignorant of the careless way in which the shipment was handled. But he had our money, and simply advised us to get our damages out of the express company, who was not in the least to blame, as it was a physical impossibility to damage the monstrous box which you see before you in perfect condition.

Good Packing the Rule.

As a rule it is a pleasure to open a box of plants from most of our large shipping houses. Young roses in large collection, wrapped five of a kind in paper with a long wooden label, a layer of paper dividing the varieties, the box well filled so the plants can not move in transit; they will not get mixed or damaged, and the box being of proper strength, the express charges will add but little to the cost of the plants.

Soft stuff, such as geraniums, heliotropes, etc., may be packed in the same manner with damp sphagnum at the roots, and dry excelsior or moss around the foliage for protection. Packed in this manner we have received large boxes of adiantums from Washington, D. C., and never lost over three per cent of the tender plants. Large shipments of the tender plants should be packed in separate boxes of from forty to fifty pounds each, or if packed in large boxes, a wooden partition should be nailed in after the box is half filled so the bottom layers will not have to carry the entire weight of the contents. Heating and decay are much easier avoided by this precaution.

Large cyclamens in bloom, Lorraine begonias, Adiantum Farleyense and plants of this nature travel best in the pots, standing upright in the box, the box crated to the full height of the plants, which must be staked and wrapped with from four to six thicknesses of paper. Tight packing between the pots is essential to avoid slipping.

Large palms, araucarias, dracænas, etc., with solid pot balls, should be cleated to the ends of the box, foliage to the center. Great care must be used to wrap and tie the root balls, as otherwise they will slip through the cleats and damage is the result. Such large plants should go by freight, at a season when damage by heat or cold is least expected.

During warm weather, ventilating holes must be cut in the boxes, and protected with wire cloth against rats. During cold weather boxes must be lined with several layers of paper and cotton, or corrugated pasteboard. We have received cases of palms in cold weather, the foliage wrapped in paper, and the spaces between the plants entirely filled out with short-cut straw. This is light and a good protector against zero weather.

Large roses, shrubs and trees for short distance shipping are best packed in bales. Damp straw between and around the roots, a layer of dry material over this, and the bale well tied with rope; over this a covering of burlap to make a clean package that will travel with safety and at special rate.

For freight shipments which are sometimes weeks in transit, strong boxes with iron corner straps are preferable, and plenty of moisture at the roots is the most essential necessity in this style of packing.

SYDNEY B. WERTHEIMER, of Wertheimer Bros., New York, is sending his friends souvenir postals from Paris.

THERE is no place in which the old adage that prevention is better than cure applies with greater certainty than in dealing with insect pests in a greenhouse.

THE sessions of the S. A. F. executive board, in Philadelphia, March 11 and 12, will be held at the Hotel Walton.

THE REVIEW is in receipt of a box of seedling carnations from the Wenonah Carnation Gardens, Wenonah, N. J., several of which are of excellent promise. A large white is especially good.

THE DEATH ROLL.

William Adams Bruce.

William Adams Bruce died at his home in Jersey City, N. J., Tuesday, February 12, 1907. He was born in Brechin, Forfarshire, Scotland, in 1866, and served his apprenticeship as a seedsman with James Young in that city. After coming to America, Mr. Bruce was employed with the Cleveland Seed Co.; subsequently with Peter Henderson & Co., with which firm he remained ten years; later with James M. Thorburn & Co. as shipping clerk for about a similar period. Interment was in Bay View cemetery, Greenville, N. J., Friday, February 15. Mr. Bruce, who was well and favorably known by many in the trade, leaves a widow and two children to mourn his loss. D. A.

C. F. William Gentemann.

C. F. William Gentemann, of Quincy, Ill., passed away February 16 at Miami, Fla., where for the last three years he had spent the winter. It is not known what was the cause of his death; he was sick but a few days.

Mr. Gentemann was born in Germany sixty-nine years ago. He came to Quincy at the age of 15 years and becoming a trained florist secured a position with Governor John Hood. A few years later he went into business for himself. He was successful and five years ago retired, turning the business over to his sons, Herman and Phillip, and his daughter, Minnie. Besides these three, he leaves a wife, two sons, two daughters and three sisters. The interment took place at Quincy.

LILIES FOR SUMMER BLOOM.

Please tell me the best way to grow auratum and other lilies of the same class for summer bloom. M. A. B.

Lilies, such as auratum and speciosum, may be grown either in pots or planted outdoors for summer blooming. The latter is the more general plan. From pots an earlier lot of flowers may be had and it is possible to hasten or retard the plants, which, of course, is out of the question with outdoor-grown bulbs.

Bulbs of most of these lilies are purchasable in November, some sorts earlier. If they are to be grown in pots we prefer planting them in 8-inch to 10-inch pots, several bulbs in a pot in preference to a single bulb in a receptacle of smaller size. Use good loam and sand but no fresh animal manure. Put the bulbs quite well down in the pots and leave a space for top-dressing. As the plants start to grow place in a cellar, frost-proof shed or under the bench of a cold greenhouse. Do not attempt to force them as you would Harrisii, for they will not stand it.

Where outdoor culture is carried out the best times to plant the bulbs are in November and early April, the fall being the best time, for then the roots make considerable growth before spring. All varieties should be planted eight to ten inches deep, except in the case of L. candidum, which should not be covered more than four inches. A little shade is beneficial to nearly all lilies and a rather friable loam is preferable to heavy clay loam. A mulching of well-rotted manure or leaves over the plants when they start to grow is very beneficial.

A few of the best commercial sorts to grow are L. candidum, which should be planted not later than the middle of September, either outdoors or in pots; L. speciosum in several forms, such as album, Melpomene and rubrum, L. auratum, L. Henryi, rather high priced but a magnificent lily, propagating freely, very vigorous and free from disease; L. tigrinum splendens, L. superbum, L. Batmanniæ and L. elegans in variety. Of the foregoing L. candidum, auratum and speciosum are probably the best commercially and all are excellent for for pot culture. W. N. C.

CATERPILLAR AND BUTTERFLY.

Enclosed are leaves of a cineraria and a geranium, also a caterpillar and butterfly. Will you kindly let me know how to get rid of them, as they have done much damage? I have tried slug shot and spraying with nicotine, but it has done no good. A. W.

The caterpillar in question cannot be gotten rid of by spraying, and slug shot, excellent remedy though it be, is less effective than hand picking. Fumigation will kill the small butterflies. They should also be caught whenever possible. The only really effective method to clear out the worms we have found to be hand picking. If this is done carefully every day you will soon get them under control. This applies to several other varieties of caterpillars, which attack chrysanthemums, mignonette and other indoor plants. For the small worm which skeletonizes the foliage on marguerites spray frequently with Nico-Fume juice. It will clear it out.

THE TRADE PAPER.

DEAR FLORISTS' REVIEW: — Enclosed please find the dollar to renew my subscription. I find great pleasure and profit in reading the REVIEW. It is the only paper in which I really enjoy reading the advertisements. One reason is that I find money in them. But one of the greatest helps I get from the REVIEW is enthusiasm. It is hard to do work that no one else is doing in your vicinity. Isolated florists in small places are very apt to become moss-grown, or if they do not, their stock does, and there is nothing like a good, live paper to brighten them up.

For twenty-one years I have kept account of my sales, and last year I broke all my previous records in amount of business and profit, but I hope to do even better this year. Everything looks bright, but I am still learning and hope always to be. Yours for success,

CHICAGO.

The Great Central Market.

Ever since the first part of last week the market suffered because supplies were ahead of legitimate requirements in nearly all lines. The change from a long period of scarcity to one of abundant supply was so sudden that the large buyers of cheap lots did not have time to get their machinery in operation and it was not so easy to dispose of the accumulation as it will be as soon as the cheap sales stores through the country become awake to the fact that their busy season is at hand. This week finds a slightly improved demand, but city trade is still quiet and there are more than abundant supplies in all lines, with the possible exceptions of American Beauty and Bride roses.

The greatest difficulty has been experienced with violets. The spring crop is on and the receipts, both of locally grown singles and Rhinebeck doubles, are far the greatest of the year. The result has been that there have been no stable values. The select stock has been picked out at fair figures and the balance has been sold for whatever price it would bring, which was little indeed. The sidewalk salesmen have been able to use violets at 20 cents to 25 cents per hundred on pleasant days. When the temperature was below freezing they have had no use for them at any price.

Valley is a glut and daffodils, jonquils and tulips have been a decided oversupply, so that growers' averages are causes for complaint. Callas, which were scarce for months and selling at $2 per dozen, last week became so plentiful that, although many were sold, some were left to go to the waste barrel. Easter lilies are quite plentiful if one does not consider quality. Good ones are scarce, the bulk of the stock being short in stem and small and thin in flower.

The call for carnations has been dropping off wherever buyers have glass of their own. Receipts are probably four times as great as they were three weeks ago. There is some poor stock, but most of the receipts are fine. The legitimate demand leaves a large proportion of each day's cut to find its way out through the buyers of thousand lots, which means low averages. The price of carnations has been much ahead of last year all through this season up to the last week. Now it is below the same period for last year.

Roses are faring rather better than other items, for the crops are not so heavy. Quality is excellent and fair business is being done with roses. Brides are not equal to the demand and Beauties are not yet in large receipt, but cuts are coming on and there is report that supplies will be heavy at Easter. Chatenay is in good crop with several growers and Richmond is producing well.

The fern situation causes uneasiness. Green goods are not in special demand, but receipts are not heavy and it is not always possible to pick up stock wanted on late orders. The price of adiantum is advancing.

Carnation Green.

St. Patrick's day is March 17. It brings a demand for green carnations and all sorts of dyes are offered. Mrs. Frank Beu, in the Flower Growers' Market, is thought to have been the originator of green carnations, having exhibited them at the flower show in 1902. Mr. Beu brought knowledge of the formula from Germany years ago. Mrs. Beu says she sold over $100 worth of the dye at the Flower Growers' Market last year.

Lily Prospects.

The principal theme of discussion is the prospect for lilies being ready for Easter. In spite of the fact that several of the large growers say they will be on time, there is a general sentiment that supplies will be less than usual and prices consequently higher. There is considerable difference in estimates as to what the market will be, but $15 per hundred is the price at which a number of houses are booking advance orders. It seems not unlikely that the market may go higher, but $15 is a better average than lilies ever made in this market, and a fair basis for early business. The later market will depend much upon the weather in the next three weeks.

Various Notes.

H. A. Vent, formerly with J. A. Budlong, will start in business for himself at Dekalb. He will grow asters and sweet peas this summer and expects to open a retail store next autumn.

The A. L. Randall Co. expresses pleasure with the results of the exhibition at Bloomington. A satisfactory number of orders were booked on the spot and others are coming in daily.

George Reinberg will carry over most of his rose plants this year. He will drop Liberty and Uncle John from the list. He finds Richmond much the most profitable red rose. A quantity of Richmond is being grafted, also a couple of houses of Killarney. Two houses are to be planted to Miss Kate Moulton and part of these will be grafted.

August Poehlmann, of the Poehlmann Bros. Co., reports a splendid business in young stock, the demand for cuttings of American Beauty being especially strong. He reports having received a number of orders for field-grown carnation plants for autumn delivery.

The Graff-Landfield wedding at the Unity Club Sunday evening was a large affair, a number of those in the trade attending.

C. L. Washburn says he thinks lilies will be generally scarce for Easter and refers to a number of inquiries received from those who usually grow their own lilies, but who this year will not have them in on time.

The Retail Florists' Association will meet at Handel hall this evening.

In the democratic primaries last week Peter Reinberg carried his ward for his friend, Harrison. Leonard Kill and a number of growers in the Rose Hill neighborhood were busy getting out the vote.

Anton Then writes from Magnolia Springs, Ala., that he is steadily improving in health.

Kennicott Bros. Co. will not move to its new location until after Easter.

At Washington park the show house is filled with finely flowered azaleas.

Notices have been received that T. Mosco, who formerly conducted the flower store in the Masonic Temple, has filed a petition in bankruptcy at Sacramento, Cal. He was in the debt of a number of wholesale houses.

The west park commissioners are soliciting bids for a range of conservatories and greenhouses to be erected in Garfield park. The ground space to be covered is approximately 230x302 feet. Six houses are to be built, averaging in height from twenty-five to sixty feet, the width from fifty to eighty feet, and surrounding a large court covered with glass. Bids are to be opened March 12.

E. C. Amling says the call for greens is about the strongest feature of the market at present.

Easter supplies are occupying a considerable part of C. W. McKellar's attention. He handles some nice gardenias.

pect the glut of violets to continue long and say prices now are no lower than a year ago.

The mother of the Wietor brothers celebrated her seventy-fifth birthday anniversary February 25. She is still strong and full of pride in her "boys."

The Benthey-Coatsworth Co. now has its new store in shape, resplendent in its several coats of white paint.

C. M. Dickinson, at E. H. Hunt's, says if the call for Easter supplies indicates what the cut flower demand will be, we have our biggest holiday almost in sight.

Roses are still moving briskly at Zech & Mann's, but carnations go a little slow. Shipping is good with them.

Sinner Bros. are just finishing setting a Sterling water tube boiler of 100 horsepower, equipped with a Martin rocking grate.

George S. Wood, who served many years as press agent for the Chicago flower show, was one of the passengers on the Pennsylvania's flyer that went into the Conemaugh river February 22. He escaped with a few bruises.

S. S. Skidelsky, Philadelphia, was a visitor this week.

The Foley Mfg. Co. has certified to an increase in its capital stock from $25,000 to $100,000.

HELENA, MONT.—Charles O. Horn and Miss Effie Wood were married February 21. The bridegroom is 30 years of age and has been in the florists' business for sixteen years. The bride, a popular young lady, has lived in Helena for a number of years. A reception and dance at Germania hall followed the ceremony.

ST. LOUIS.

The Market.

Business is holding up fairly well, as there is always something doing at the large establishments. Weddings and parties are scarce just now, but work for funerals kept up pretty well all of last week. In the downtown district they had a violet war last week, trying to corner the market by buying up all the violets at the different wholesale houses. In the residence districts the florists are not complaining much and say trade is much better than expected during Lent.

The expected glut in roses has failed to come. Only a few of any of the standard varieties are coming in, so prices on these remain firm. Carnations have dropped a few points. Enchantress is difficult to dispose of, as there are many more of this variety than any other. Lawson, Nelson Fisher and Bountiful are fine in quality and plentiful.

Violets, too, have dropped in price. Extra fancy bring only 40 cents now and $3 in thousand lots. Sweet peas are coming in more plentifully and some extra fine pink and white with long stems are in the market. Plenty of bulbous stock is in now, Dutch hyacinths, Von Sions, tulips, Romans and lily of the valley. Paper Whites are scarce. There are few lilies at present, more callas than Harrisii.

Shipping trade among the wholesalers is reported not so good at present.

Various Notes.

George M. Kellogg, of Pleasant Hill, Mo., called Friday of last week on his way to Hot Springs, Ark., with a party of friends. Mr. Kellogg called for a copy of the REVIEW and said, "That's one thing I have to have each week."

Alex Johnson will this spring build a large store and showhouse at the corner of Easton and Wellston streets. Mr. Johnson has fully recovered from his recent illness.

The St. Louis Horticultural Society held its regular monthly meeting February 19 at the Hamilton hotel, elected nineteen new members and revised the premium list for the spring show, which is to be held the first week in March in the Masonic temple, on Grand avenue. The list is now in the hands of the printer. There will be no charge for admission. It will be a society affair, appealing to our best people, and will be open from 9:30 a. m. to 10 p. m. President Harry Young says everything is in readiness for the show and looks for a large attendance. The list of prizes amounts to over $300, with a great many entries already in. Those wishing copies of the list should address Secretary Otto G. Koenig.

The Florists' Club's flower show committee met at the Rozier hotel February 20, and decided to return to the many subscribers their subscriptions they so kindly gave, with a letter explaining why they were returned. Their final report will be made at the next meeting of the club, March 14.

There are three vacancies for scholarships at the Missouri Botanic Garden. One is to be filled by the Missouri Horticultural Society and two by the trustees of the garden. Any one knowing a young man wishing a scholarship should make it known to the trustees. Another vacancy will take place a year from this spring, which will be filled by the St. Louis Florists' Club.

John Burke reports that he has leased the corner of Sixth and Locust streets for ten years and will open one of the finest stores in the country.

The Foster Floral Co., at 507 Olive street, will soon have to vacate its store. Fred Foster says that he has new quarters in view near the old stand and will make known the new place within the next ten days.

Himmers Bros., out at Meramec Highlands, are cutting thousands of extra quality California violets. Nick Himmers reports that they will build a few new houses this summer.

R. W. Eastlick, who has established an office here of the Bombayreed Manufacturing Co., Columbia, S. C., reports quite a number of orders from the local trade and surrounding towns in Illinois and Missouri.

Miss Newman, at Spring avenue and Olive street, is making a grand show of blooming plants and choice cut flowers.

Charles Schoenle, on the south side, says that they have not as yet felt Lent. Business has been good in all lines, and it must be so from the amount of stock he buys each morning at the commission houses.

NEW YORK.

The Market.

Over in Connecticut the papers say the trailing arbutus has already lifted its sweet face above the snow. But that was a week ago and now we have the long, cold winter back again, the winter prophesied by William Scott and the beavers, and later by the ground-hog, whose prophesy to come true has only two weeks more to run. Saturday it was hugging zero again. Sunday we had a blizzard and all day the snow came down, until there were six inches on the level. Monday streets were impassable and business was at a standstill. Towards evening it moderated, so that the street merchants appeared with their violets and "25 cents a bunch" again was the cry for all the best shipments of Saturday and Sunday, for on Saturday night there were half a million violets in the boxes of the wholesalers. Scores of thousands were closed out as low as $2 a thousand and for the best of the few shipments Monday evening never more than 50 cents was offered. There is not any likelihood of advance from these figures before Easter, which now is only four short weeks away.

The American Beauty has surely demonstrated its place through all the depression as the queen of the floral realm. Its price does not retrograde, for of the best stock there is not enough for the demand. Maids and Brides fluctuate in price, top grades holding well at $12 and seldom for the poorest roses in the market has the cleaning out process taken them below $3.

Carnations are abundant and never were of better quality. But there are so many that prices have been greatly shaded and $3 to $4 will buy the finest of the new varieties. The bulk of the sales are made at $3 and under.

There are altogether too many tulips. Never has the market been so completely flooded at this season; $5 a thousand was the price Saturday for most of them, and $10 for narcissi. Valley in every grade is excessive in quantity and low in price. There are plenty of orchids. Gardenias have been cut in two, but lilies are maintained at last week's prices.

With clearer and warmer weather this week we look for a great increase in shipments of every kind of stock and we hope business may improve generally. To study the social calendar of the Sunday journals would indicate an extensive crop of events requiring flowers. But the call of Europe and the sunny south is depleting the ranks of the flower buyers rapidly. Many have already gone to France and the Mediterranean voyage is becoming popular.

The holiday last week hardly caused a ripple in the wholesale sea. A few loyal florists made their windows gay with red, white and blue effects, but the majority evidently forgot that the immortal George had ever lived.

The Club Dinner.

The Florists' Club's annual dinner, February 23, was a great success, except that where there should be 200 at these functions we have to be satisfied with little more than a quarter of that number. The hope of the toast-master that the room and tables would be doubled in 1908 is shared by all who enjoyed the reunion of 1907, which was the twentieth annual one. The decorations were worthy of a banquet of statesmen. A. J. Forsythe, of the St. Denis, was the artist and his work attracted a host of the guests of the big hotel. There were daffodils from John Young, Welcome from Dailledouze Bros., Alma Ward from C. W. Ward, Winsor from the F. R. Pierson Co., and orchids from Lager & Hurrell, this generous firm providing a handsome Dendrobium nobile for every guest.

The menu was fully up to the standard of the house and gave general satisfaction. During the progress of the dinner the Scotch airs of the orchestra so wrought upon the exhilarated sensibilities of Bob Berry and John Birnie that they burst into song and were ably seconded by the German melodies of Bobby Schultz. The stories of Jack McDonald and songs of Mr. Wade also were pleasing interludes. The whole evening was especially harmonious and it was long after midnight before the last of the guests departed. The Jersey contingent missed the last train, as usual, and were taken in charge by the Rickards brothers until morning.

President Totty filled the chair with dignity and suavity and Patrick O'Mara made an ideal toast-master, as usual. His introductions of the speakers were apt, humorous and sincere. He spoke eloquently of the broad interests that should actuate the club's members, the inspirations of the festive board, the æsthetic side of the florists' business and the divine spark of enthusiasm without which no one could become a successful grower. He dwelt upon the need of loyalty to the club and to the national society and closed a brilliant speech with a fine tribute to the character and ability of President Totty, whose response was full of confidence and glorious appreciation of the club's loyalty to his efforts in its behalf.

The toast to the S. A. F. was responded to by J. C. Vaughan, of Chicago. His theme was unity and organization and his plea for the national show at Chicago met responsive greeting. He spoke, too, of the wonderful development of the cut flower business during the last twenty years, illustrated with actual accomplishments in his own city, where from a market gardener a millionaire florist has evolved. He told of the messenger boy of that time, with his basket of Bon Silene, Saffrano, smilax, heliotrope and alyssum, the beginning of the commission business and now with twenty great wholesale houses sending products to every corner of the land. He also took occasion to commend the generous coöperation of the great city journals and closed with a strong invitation to New Yorkers to attend the national exhibition.

Mr. O'Mara paid a glowing tribute to the private gardener in introducing Harry Turner, who responded to the toast, "Estate Development." Mr. Turner gave an interesting account of his experiences in England and dwelt especially on the unlimited possibilities for the legitimate use of funds in his work and the beautiful results that could be accomplished.

To the toast, "The Agriculturist and the Horticulturist," Senator James F. Minturn, of New Jersey, responded. The senator was the surprise promised by the committee and landed by his friend, O'Mara, and his oration was fully up to the expectations, witty, eloquent, brilliant, historical.

The toast, "Our Night, and Memories of the Florists' Club," was ably responded to by Walter Sheridan, whose reminiscences of twelve years on the dinner committee covered all the ground of that eventful period.

The toast, "The Work of the Horticultural Explorer," involving "the bravery of the man who risks the dangers of discovery," was ably descanted upon by the intrepid orchid gatherer, John E. Lager, of Lager & Hurrell, Summit, N. J. His South American experiences were thrilling and most interesting. His story would fill a volume and some day it will, for Mr. Lager has a book on orchids on the way.

"Exhibitions and Educators" was expounded by John Birnie, who gave many interesting historical facts concerning the fine clubs and floral exhibitions in Jersey in former years. He also dwelt upon the claims of the "creators" and the discussions of the last few weeks concerning the new varieties of fruit and flower in the golden state.

Mr. O'Mara characterized "The Press" as the nation's educator, the voice of the people, free and untrammeled, and the horticultural press as pro bono publico. The toast was responded to by S. S. Butterfield, who declared that the "greatest trouble of the press was to keep from getting into trouble."

The final toast of the evening was given in the early morning and, of course, was to the ladies, without whom there would be no floriculture, no garden of Eden, no anything. Every good word spoken for the gentler sex struck a responsive chord in the hearts of all, both benedict and bachelor, and so, after votes of thanks to the generous donors of the flowers, and the dinner committee, and the toast-master, and the Senator, the twentieth annual closed without the striking of a discordant note and with the strengthening of the ties of friendship among the club's members that should redound to its prosperity through all the year.

Various Notes.

It will be rose night at the club early in March and this and the Washington convention together will make the next meeting of special interest. The date is March 11 and a goodly number of the club's members have already arranged to attend the convention. There will probably be a special car for them.

Arthur T. Boddington is making a special run on spiræas for Decoration day and reports an unprecedented demand for everything in the seed and bulb line this season.

Siebrecht & Son are sending in from their New Rochelle conservatories daily an abundance of orchids, Killarney and blooming plants of every seasonable kind.

M. A. Bowe has had a grip experience of many weeks that has made the winter an unhappy memory. He is now convalescing rapidly. Dozens of the florists have had similar experiences. The epidemic has been widespread and few have escaped except the "health cranks," who claim exemption from all maladies.

Lecakes & Co. announce the arrival of a carload of wild smilax and the largest stock of galax they have ever stored.

Joseph Fenrich and B. S. Slinn, Jr., handle some grand white violets daily. The demand for these is fluctuating and nondependable. When they are wanted they easily double the price of the ordinary variety.

Charles Schenck, of Traendly & Schenck, and his bride have returned from their southern trip.

John J. Foley, who has been ill since Christmas, has recovered and is on deck at his headquarters on the Bowery as usual. His new "floral fotographs" are much in demand.

A visit to the growers now gives an excellent line on what the Easter stock will be. In Flatbush and Bay Ridge the J. M. Keller Co., Charles Zeller's Son, John Scott and Louis Schmutz have already a fine assortment on exhibition. Will Siebrecht, at Astoria, R. Dryer, at Woodside, Anton Schultheis, at College Point, and Mr. Darlington, The Hinode Co., Louis Dupuy and Pankok & Schumacher, at Whitestone, all have large stocks. Over in Jersey are the Julius Roehrs Co., Bobbink & Atkins, H. C. Steinhoff, F. Dressel and a host of others on whom the metropolitan market depends.

The sympathy of the trade goes out to the family of William Adams Bruce, whose death occurred on February 12, at Jersey City. He was the greatly appreciated shipping clerk of the J. M. Thorburn Co. for many years.

Mrs. Clarke, of Ft. Greene place, near Fulton street, Brooklyn, one of the pioneer florists of the Church City, has retired from business after thirty years of active and successful service.

John Wilson, the rose grower of the firm of Wilson & Hoyt, Short Hills, N. J., has patented a new greenhouse bench that promises to become popular. It is made of concrete reinforced with steel and is practically everlasting. These benches are now being installed in the establishment of Robert G. Wilson, on Greene avenue, near Fulton street, Brooklyn, the old Shannon place. Mr. Wilson has eight greenhouses here that are being completely repaired and modernized, as well as stables and other needed facilities for his rapidly growing business.

A. B. Kretschmar, of West Nyack, cousin of A. H. Langjahr, was married last week to Miss Kalesch, of Brooklyn. The Kretschmar brothers were formerly residents of Flatbush and Chas. Koch was the purchaser of their greenhouse interests there some thirteen years ago.

J. Austin Shaw.

Scranton, Pa.—The Scranton Florists' Club will have its first exhibition at Guernsey hall March 15.

South Bend, Ind.—The South Bend Floral Co. has been busy with some changes in its establishment. New iceboxes have been installed and Walter Tapper, a rose grower from Philadelphia, will take charge of the greenhouse.

Albany, N. Y.—W. C. King is about to move to a new location on the corner of Steuben and North Pearl streets, where he will enjoy more commodious quarters. The new store will have fifty feet of frontage and will be fifty feet deep.

Current Comment.

It is not often that people living in Newport have reason to complain of the severity of the weather, but if it served any good purpose I would not blame them, even the old natives, for grumbling a bit at the weather we are having now. Just think of it! Zero for several nights in February, with the month of January as dark as London in a fog! Roses are scarce, and no wonder. How could they be otherwise under such conditions? If roses would bloom freely in weather like we have been having I would go home to Ireland and make a fortune growing Beauties. Roses are high—too high for Lent—but they are a distinct luxury, so it does not matter so much. Carnations are plentiful and of good quality, but the local supply is not equal to the demand; there are a great many shipped from Boston.

Last week an amateur minstrel company played in the opera house two evenings for the purpose of raising the sum of $2,000 to pay up the deficiency in the account of the carnival committee. The efforts of the minstrels during the first performance so pleased a local gentleman of means that the next morning he sent by messenger an order to several florists to make a large number of bunches of American Beauties and carnations for presentation to every lady participant. The result was a great scurrying to procure the necessary material. It was obtained, however, and the good-natured gentleman grumbled not a bit at the bills.

ladies' night. A most enjoyable evening was spent. J. T. Allen is chairman of the entertainment committee. There are two objects in view in having one or more ladies' nights every winter. The first, of course, is due to consideration for the enjoyment of the ladies themselves. The next and secondary consideration is the recognized belief that the ladies are responsible, one way or the other, for the attendance of members at the meetings. It is hoped that in future they will look at it in the way of one good turn deserving another and will place no obstacles in a member's way when desiring to go to the meetings. However, I will let you know later how it will turn out.

The excellent project of school gardens is now receiving the attention here it deserves. Last year at one large school the children in several grades took great pains with their plots in the school garden. This year it is hoped that several schools will fall in line and perhaps enter into friendly rivalry for the best kept garden as a whole and for the best products. The Horticultural Society will offer eighteen premiums, all cash, for flowers and vegetables, the products of these gardens. There is also a likelihood of several special premiums being offered for the children's garden products.

Newport, as nearly everybody knows, is a blaze of glory in the summer. In the majority of places there is but little grown in the way of cut flowers on private places. There are, however, a few notable exceptions. The most prominent of these is Sea Verge, Commodore Gerry's place, where there is an immense range of glass, in part devoted to the growing of flowers and fruit for shipment to New York in winter. Arthur Griffin is gardener in charge here, and if there is one thing he excels in more than another it is melons, with which he has had the greatest success imaginable uninterruptedly for a number of years. But this year I think he would rather somebody he was not overfond of had the job of growing them instead of himself.

The seedsmen have come and gone, and good luck to them; I mean next year and every other year. Poor fellows, they have rather a hard time of it, there are so many of them; but I think that on the whole they fared pretty well this year. Everyone has a novelty or two, some a dozen. Let them keep up the novelty business; there is money in it. What we need now is a good novelty in the plant line. Who will give us a good one?

WASHINGTON.

The Market.

One of the coldest waves of the winter struck Washington February 22, but seemed to affect the stores in no way, as little vacant space is found. Trade is brisk and prices still remain high, owing ing to a scarcity, especially of cut flowers. There was a rather large shipment of carnations into the District from Pennsylvania Saturday, which caused a slight stagnation in the market. Notwithstanding an abundance of sunshine home-grown flowers are still scarce and readily command good prices. Lilac is rather plentiful and is the best seller just now. Good azaleas at reasonable prices are in abundance but move slowly. Bulbous stock is not so much in evidence since the beginning of the Lenten season, as most growers are retaining the bulk of their stock for Easter. There are a good many dinners among the society people, which afford the retailers considerable decorative work.

Various Notes.

The next regular monthly meeting of the Washington Florists' Club, and the annual election of officers, will take place at Gude's hall, 1214 F street, N. W., March 5. This will be an important meeting, the last prior to convention. We should be glad to see any of our out-of-town friends who happen to be in the city that night.

Enchantress is endeavoring to be long remembered not only for its value to the trade as it now stands, but by reason of its descendent, Rose-pink Enchantress. We hear of the latter from several sections of the country. Two fine sports, so far as is known identical with the first, have favored at least two Washington growers this season. J. L. C.

BOSTON.

The Market.

Trade is slower than a week ago. Flowers are much more abundant, with the single exception of roses, which still continue scarce. The weather has been unusually severe, the lowest readings of the winter being recorded February 23 and 24. Roses are not yet sufficient for demands and prices hold up remarkably well. Beauties are scarce, of the better grades, but more Richmond and Liberty are seen. Killarney is coming in of fine quality and maintains its popularity. Bride and Maid should be fairly plentiful within a few days.

No particular change in prices of either carnations or violets is noted, although both are selling slower than a week ago. Bulbous stock is in large supply, but there is no glut as in previous years. Sweet peas keep about $1 per hundred and are fine from several growers. Lilies and callas are sufficient for all requirements. Some good antirrhinum is seen, bringing up to $2 per dozen stalks. A variety of other spring flowers are now coming in. Smilax is rather scarce, but adiantum and Asparagus plumosus and Sprengeri are in good supply.

Various Notes.

Welch Bros. report business as excellent. In their commodious new quarters they will be able to handle a tremendous Easter trade in plants and flowers and they expect it to far exceed all past years.

Mann Bros., who are large bulb growers, are bringing in fine lots of that beautiful double orange tulip, Couronne d'Or.

There was a large attendance at the funeral of Mrs. William R. Nicholson, at Framingham, February 22, including many in the trade. The floral designs were numerous and beautiful. The sincere sympathy of a large number of friends goes out to Mr. Nicholson in his bereavement.

deners attended the state house hearing on the steam boiler question February 21. It is pretty generally believed that florists and market gardeners will be exempted from the rather drastic provisions of the proposed law. There were no less than fourteen bills dealing with steam boiler legislation.

Peter B. Robb, of Whitinsville, has in flower a finely grown plant of the beautiful Cattleya Trianæ Amesiana. The sepals and petals are pure white, with a broad band of delicate pink shaded with violet on the edge of the lip. This is one of the most unique forms of Cattleya Trianæ in existence.

H. H. Barrows & Son, of Whitman, have a fine exhibit of their Nephrolepsis Whitmanni at the Park street flower market. They have another new sport which promises to be even better than their two previous introductions.

W. W. Edgar & Co. have the finest lot of lilies, azaleas and other Easter plants in their history. They report a small proportion of diseased lilies.

Seed merchants report a satisfactory mail trade, but state that the unusually severe weather is delaying market gardeners from purchasing their supplies.

Music at the coming spring exhibition will be furnished by an excellent ladies' orchestra, which will be a pleasing innovation.

Professor F. W. Rane, state forester of Massachusetts, lectured on "Forestry from a Commercial Standpoint," at Horticultural hall, February 23. A lively discussion followed the lecture, which denoted a keen interest in the reforestation question.

William Sim, and not S. J. Goddard, exhibited the splendid sweet peas at the club meeting February 19. Mr. Sim also showed the new Boston violet in splendid condition. A telegraphic blunder also gave Mr. Morton an addition to his real name.

Primula Kewensis, as shown by Thomas Coles at the last club meeting, took every eye. Mr. Coles states that he gave it precisely the same treatment as Primula obconica. It should make a popular commercial plant. The flowers are fragrant and bright yellow, produced in whorls, on stout flower scapes twelve to eighteen inches high.

February, 1907, will be long remembered as one of the coldest winter months on record. The cold wave of February 22, 23 and 24 was severe, readings from 10 degrees to 30 degrees below zero being recorded within thirty miles of Boston. The abundance of snow pleases lumbermen, but florists will be glad to see the last of it.

Henry Wild, of Greenwich, Conn., spent a few days in town last week and attended the club meeting.

Carnation night at the Gardeners' and Florists' Club will come March 19, the same week as the annual spring exhibition. Those having novelties are invited to forward same for these meetings.

W. H. Elliott is having great success with Killarney and Richmond roses at his Madbury, N. H., establishment, and is sending in splendid flowers of both varieties. W. N. CRAIG.

FINDLAY, O.—J. J. Waaland has purchased the stock of plants of S. M. Hartman, at Van Buren, and will add it to his stock here.

MARION, IND.

The marriage of Gunnar Teilmann and Miss Maria Banz took place Wednesday evening, February 20, at the Teilmann home, north of the city. This announcement will come as a complete surprise to the many friends of Mr. Teilmann. Miss Banz had been in America two years, coming here from Germany. She was a niece of the first Mrs. Teilmann, who died several months ago, and during her sickness she was a faithful attendant and nurse. The Rev. Bennett performed the ceremony in the presence of a few friends.

NEW ORLEANS.

Current Comment.

The winter of 1907 will be remembered as one of the mildest we ever had. We know of many florists in New Orleans who will count the coal they have been using by the barrels, or even by the buckets, and this only to keep their plants from becoming chilly. This is one point in our favor.

Superintendent Joseph Bernard, of the City park, is planting thousands of roses and trees.

The New Orleans Horticultural Society held its annual meeting last week. The committee of revision of by-laws presented an amendment to the mode of election to membership and also recommended the appointment of a subtreasurer during a flower show. Both amendments were approved. After the transaction of business relative to the last convention the meeting adjourned. The committee of arrangement of the

The Rising Eastern Market.

The market has shown further shrinkage in values during the last week, noticeable especially on carnations, sweet peas, lilac and valley. Mignonette, too, has depreciated, owing, chiefly, to lack of quality. It is rather difficult for bulbous flowers to depreciate in value, Golden Spur, as recorded last week, being lower than in the memory of man. Tulips, too, are pretty cheap; even the buyers say that and the quality in general is fair. Daffodils are rather less plentiful than a week ago, but they, too, are cheap. Freesia has passed its glory. There are plenty of good flowers about, but they are less plentiful and lower in price. Paper Whites can still be seen, but Romans are practically over, so far as the quality is concerned. Easter lilies have fallen off a trifle, and white lilac can now be had at bargain prices. Violets are in good supply, of fine quality, and at the current prices, which are fair for the season, they sell pretty well, the street men clearing up the day-old stock at reasonably good figures. Carnations are in moderately good supply, of fine quality and in fair demand. Roses shortened up a trifle since a week ago. Some fine Bride, Bridesmaid and Richmond are coming in. Beauties are so scarce that the extra and medium grades are practically out of the market, specials of fair quality and what the street terms "bum shorts," being in evidence. Sweet peas are plentiful and of fine quality. Pink are in fair demand, but white are rather hard to sell. Prices are unusually low for the season. Greens have been selling well.

Pittville.

During the spring months our florists may be divided into two camps, one embracing West Philadelphia and the centrally located stores professing allegiance to Jacob Becker; the other embracing North Philadelphia, Kensington, Tioga and Germantown, who follow the banner of Charles Meckey. Their rule is as absolute, though less arbitrary, than that of Senator McNichol or of the Vare brothers. For every florist who wants good roses, geraniums or other garden plants encompassed by well burnt clay in standard sizes knows one or the other of these places to be his Mecca at some time during the busy spring.

Great, then, was the consternation in North Philadelphia, Kensington, Tioga and Germantown when it became known last summer that Charles Meckey had pulled up his stakes, removing his entire plant from the built-up section at Seventeenth and Erie streets to a place called Pittville, nobody knew just where. The Review, being, as you know, most progressive, dispatched Phil to ascertain where that might be. It proved an easy task, the Willow Grove trolley connecting with those in Chelton avenue to Limekiln pike, and there you are.

Mr. Meckey, Jr., was hard at work but kindly led the way through some fifteen well-built houses. About two-thirds are the old houses rebuilt, the remainder being entirely new. The place, containing some 40,000 square feet of glass, is built in the shape of the letter L, bound by a connecting passage way. The new rose houses are one side, running east and west. The older houses run north and south, opening into as fine a boiler and packing shed as could be wished. The half of the shed devoted to the heating apparatus contains three large hot water boilers and is open up to the roof of the shed, the idea being to insure against fire. The sides of the boiler-pit are of stone or concrete. The other half of the shed, which is perhaps 40x75 feet, is for potting and loading the wagons. The moving and building, which occupied the entire summer and part of the autumn, interfered with the usual fall crop, but indications were seen everywhere of a large output this spring. There is a fine barn and plenty of land, but even out here the place is already bordered by a fringe of dwelling houses.

Various Notes.

B. Eschner, of M. Rice & Co., returned on Monday after a seven weeks' business trip. Mr. Eschner says that he never saw the country in more prosperous condition. His test of prosperity is his order book.

J. D. Eisele has returned to Riverton safe and sound, after a stormy passage across the Atlantic.

Berger Bros. move on Friday to their new quarters, formerly occupied by Dumont & Co., 1305 Filbert street. They take with them all their consignors and present business and add the business of the former tenants. Stockton & Howell, of Princeton, N. J., are sending them extra fine Brides and Bridesmaids.

Frank Gaul, manager of the Century Flower Shop, is ill with typhoid fever at his home in Darby. Mr. Gaul has many business friends who wish him a speedy recovery.

The managers of the Florex Gardens are busily engaged receiving and storing the material for the mammoth new house, which will cover an acre and a half of ground.

P. J. Lynch, secretary and treasurer of the Dingee & Conard Co., of West Grove, Pa., will deliver an address before the Florists' Club in Horticultural hall next Tuesday evening on the mailing plant business.

David Rust, chairman of the Florists' Club's house committee, laid the clubroom need for the sinews of war to pay for a new bowling alley so persuasively before the members that it was a pleasure to vote for the necessary appropriation.

The Wm. Graham Co. has received the entire orders for Easter plants from two large department stores, John Wanamaker and Gimbel Bros. It is said that this will consume about one-half the Hugh Graham Co.'s stock of Easter plants at Logan.

Herbert G. Tull, treasurer of the Henry A. Dreer Co., reports an increase over last February in their seed mail orders.

F. R. Matsinger, of Palmyra, N. J., expects to retire from the ranks of the growers.

Arthur A. Niessen, secretary and treasurer of the Leo Niessen Co., has his office force domiciled in the second story of the new building at 1209 Filbert street. Mr. Niessen keeps in close touch with every department of the company's large business.

H. Bayersdorfer & Co. have a pretty novelty in the so-called Japanese air plant, or green sea moss, much prized for its decorative beauty. Mr. Berkowitz has just returned from another flying trip.

The Henry F. Michell Co. lays great stress on having the store from front window to back, always neat and attractive.

Answers to Correspondents.

Review readers are invited to send any questions relating to culture or marketing of plants and flowers in Philadelphia, to Phil, in care of any of the leading seed or commission houses. Each question will be submitted to a competent person and answered under number. Correct name and address must always accompany inquiry, but will not be published.

Referring again to question No. 75, it is probable that should the lilies reach this market in perfect condition, they would average from $5 to $8 a hundred. The quotation given last week of $3 to $5 a hundred was based on the assumption that a percentage would be bruised.

76 — Please repeat method you described for propagating Adiantum hybridum.

Ans.—I have been able to get some seedlings by allowing the spores to fall on the soil around the plants, although it is said to be a mule. A few Adiantum hybridum can be obtained from spores. They can be readily produced in quantity by removing the lower third from pot-bound plants and placing this mass of roots in sphagnum moss in a case with a gentle bottom heat. Treat them as you would seedlings. They should start quickly and grow rapidly.

Rose Night at Philadelphia.

At the last meeting of the Florists' Club of Philadelphia it was unanimously decided to invite P. J. Lynch, secretary and treasurer of the Dingee & Conard Co., West Grove, Pa., to prepare a paper on "Rose Plants by Mail," to be delivered at the regular monthly meeting on the evening of Tuesday, March 5, and in this connection novelties among roses are invited to be exhibited on the same evening. All who have novelties will kindly ship same in care of David Rust, Horticultural hall, Broad street above Spruce, Philadelphia, Pa., early enough so that they will be sure to reach the place of meeting on time.

The Market.

The thermometer hit the minimum temperature for the winter again last Saturday morning, dropping to 9 degrees at 7 o'clock. The keen wind which sprang up developed into icy blasts that almost penetrated into the warmest houses and at present writing a heavy snow storm is on hand. Great difficulty was experienced in making deliveries of cut flowers.

Society has been in full blast, many banquets were held and Washington's birthday was observed in a patriotic way that called for several decorations, so that business may be said to be as good as could be expected, Lent being on, when a little decrease generally takes place. Funeral work has shown some falling off. However, all stock is disposed of. Roses and carnations have been a little more abundant. Sweet peas are short in supply. Callas are steadier. Bulbous stock can be had in any quantity. Harrisii come in steadily. Violets are equal to the demand and sell nicely.

Various Notes.

Last Saturday Mr. Eberhardt was in the market with a full stall of hyacinths, four in a pan, offering them at 20 cents a pan, and disposed of a large number.

M. J. Hannigan is cutting some extra fine American Beauty roses. He is also picking extra fine single violets.

P. B. Welsh, Glyndon, Md., has picked and disposed of nearly 200,000 seeds of Asparagus plumosus. He is well known as one of the best bulb growers in Maryland and one of the most enterprising men in the business.

W. O. Strand reports that he can pick at one time 10,000 Christmas Pink sweet peas. Many old growers said that in all their experience they have never seen anything to equal it. The vines average eight to ten feet and the flowers and foliage are perfect. Mr. Strand extends an invitation to all florists to come to his place and see his house of sweet peas.

Many of our private gardeners are having a failure this year with their greenhouse tomatoes. The vines are healthy but bear no fruit.

DUTCH BULBS FOR EASTER.

I would like to know when to bring in miniature Dutch hyacinths and tulips to force for Easter. They have been out all winter. We also have a few hundred Dutch hyacinths, Romans and tulips that were put out January 19 and on which I find no growth, either at the roots or tops. The weather was warm when put out. They were put in 6-inch pots and covered with four inches of soil. Immediately after covering there came a hard rain, which was followed by a hard freeze, and it has just thawed again. How shall I treat them? I did want them for Easter, but think perhaps they would not do. I am trying a few in the cellar. C. H. H.

It is difficult to tell to a nicety just how long a time should be allowed for hyacinths and tulips for Easter flowering. Everything depends on the weather. We should say that three weeks would be ample time if the bulbs are well sprouted and given a night temperature of 50 to 55 degrees. If it is found that they will be a little too forward, it is easy to retard them in a north house or cellar. At this late season the bulbs should be sufficiently sprouted to go right in the light at once. This will insure you much more stocky plants, also, if they are for sale in pots or pans. If, on the other hand, they are for cut flowers, it would be as well to draw them up a little in the dark (under a bench will do) before placing in full light.

We are afraid the bulbs placed in pots or flats so late as January 19 will be of no use for Easter. This is far too late a date to start any of this class of bulbous stock. After the end of November the bulbs have lost so much of their stamina that they make but feeble growth. If the bulbs in the pots or flats show no growths it would be useless to attempt forcing them. Keep them outdoors or place in a cellar until the growths are two or three inches long before placing under glass. Be sure you have good roots on the bulbs before you start forcing, and get them in the soil earlier another season. C. W.

TROUBLE WITH TULIPS.

In trying to force my tulips this year I find that I am having lots of trouble. The bulbs on being brought in appear all right, but after they begin to push up some go ahead of the others. On examining those that fail to grow I find them well rooted and, on cutting the bulb open, on the inside rotten and mushy.

I would like to know what is the matter with these bulbs. About eighty per cent are as described.

We gave them the same treatment we have been giving our bulbs the last three or four years. This year we planted them in flats September 25, placed them in a bench and covered them with six inches or so of ground. Some eight or ten weeks later I examined them and they were nicely rooted. The second week in December we removed them from the trench and placed them in an old shed, so that we could get them when we wanted them. The flats on being placed in the shed were frozen solid. During January we had a thaw and the flats were thawed completely; a week or so later they were again frozen solid. Might this have been the cause? I can hardly think so, although I do not know to what else to attribute the trouble, excepting perhaps that they may have been cold storage bulbs a year old. This I have, however, never heard of before. The variety especially affected is Keizerskroon. Yellow Prince, which underwent exactly the same treatment, shows practically no signs of the trouble. I am forcing these bulbs in a temperature of 55 degrees to 58 degrees at night at the middle of February. Will some one who knows what this trouble may be kindly explain? E. W. K.

The several freezings and thawings your tulips had must have done them harm. It is true that these bulbs are perfectly hardy, and in the open ground one or two stiff freezes does not hurt them in the least, especially if mulched and protected from sunlight. We have never heard of tulip bulbs being carried over in cold storage. Their extreme cheapness would make this an unprofitable practice. The variety, Keizerskroon, is an especially vigorous one and forces readily. It is possible that if the flats were frozen were very wet the shoots suffered injury which would be communicated to the bulb.

We would advise placing the flats another season, when removed from the trench, in a frostproof cellar. Water well if at all on the dry side and cover with ashes until well sprouted. Some five years ago we had a somewhat similar experience with some narcissi and tulips which were frozen hard in a cold-frame about the end of January. These bloomed very erratically and many bulbs rotted. C. W.

ABOUT CALLAS.

Will you kindly tell us about growing callas? We wish to grow quite a number for another season. Our houses are sixteen feet wide and from forty to sixty feet long. We have several houses and grow a few callas now with our bedding plants and would like to know about soil, feeding, temperature and keeping over the plants from about April 1, when our houses will be filled with bedding stock. When should the callas be put on the benches? Will carnations do in the same house? We grow for general trade in New England.

They will, however, succeed in one kept 5 degrees cooler, which would suit carnations. The callas can be grown on the center beds and carnations on the sides. If the houses will be needed for bedding plants after April 1 we would not advise planting the bulbs in the benches, as is sometimes done.

Plant one strong bulb in a 6-inch pot or three in an 8-inch pot as soon as procurable in late summer. Use a compost of two-thirds fibrous loam and one-third well dried cow manure, with a good dash of sand mixed in. A little bone meal can also be used. Keep outdoors in a warm, sunny location until danger from frost threatens, when they can be placed where they are to flower. When the pots are well filled with roots, feed liberally, using liquid manure twice a week. The plants will continue blooming until Memorial day, after which date they can be gradually dried off and laid on their sides until about August 1.

Callas will grow vigorously the year around, and a good way to strengthen the plants is to plant them out in an open, sunny spot in rich earth, cultivate freely around them and pot up about the middle of August, keeping as many roots intact as possible. If kept well syringed they will suffer little from the check and soon fill the pots with roots. Plants treated in this way will produce larger and finer flowers than when the drying off method is practiced. C. W.

Vegetable Forcing.

A NUMBER of vegetable growers at Grand Rapids, Mich., have organized a corporation with $20,000 paid in capital to take over their plants, erect a new central plant and grow vegetables on a large scale. They do not hope to influence the markets, but to gain an advantage in centralization and coöperative purchases.

VEGETABLE MARKETS.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—Mushrooms abundant and selling slowly. Cucumbers steady. Lettuce generally poor and dragging, with most sales from 50c down. Radishes weak. Rhubarb steady. Tomatoes in light supply, but tone easy. Cucumbers, 75c to $2 doz.; lettuce, 25c to 75c doz.; beet tops, 75c to $1 bu.; mushrooms, 35c to 60c lb.; mint, 50c to 75c doz. bunches; radishes, $2 to $2.50 per hundred bunches; rhubarb, 25c to 50c large bunch; parsley, 12c to 15c doz. bunches; tomatoes, 15c to 25c lb.

BLIGHTS OF VINE CROPS.

The season of 1906 in Ohio showed more than the usual amount of loss on cucumber pickles and muskmelons, from disease. Three distinct diseases are known to have occurred and these probably indicate four or more separate diseases. In the order of occurrence the first that I mention is the wilt. This disease shows itself by sudden wilting of parts of the vine and results either from inoculation of a bacterium or of a fungus, Fusarium, often being accomplished by stink-bugs. As yet we have not been able to propose anything better than the pulling and burning of diseased vines as they occur. Some experienced growers report to me a loss of fifty per cent of the vines from the wilt trouble in 1906.

Of the leaf diseases we have two that pass under the name of melon and cucumber blight, namely, the downy mildew, Plasmopora Cubensis and the leaf blight, Alternaria. Both of these can be controlled by proper spraying with Bordeaux mixture, beginning on the young vines and repeating at intervals of two weeks until the critical season, when ten-day intervals may prove better, owing to the amount of new growth and of rain. The critical period for Ohio begins with the first part of August, and rarely comes earlier than August 10 through the northern half of the state. This is the period when the downy mildew spread over the state last year and cut off practically all unsprayed vines of cucurbits, both melons and cucumbers. Occasionally fields were not struck until early September. The downy mildew sweeps our state as early as above stated during warm midsummers, but may be delayed two weeks in cool seasons like that of 1904 or 1905.

The leaf blight of the muskmelon does not show particularly until the melons are of good size and the susceptibility of the vines reaches its highest point. Despite this fact, thorough spraying with Bordeaux mixture has always proved profitable when it has been followed out on right principles. Of course the spraying is not a remedy for the wilt disease that has already been mentioned. Each season increases the evidence as to the certain profits to be derived from proper spraying of muskmelon and cucumber vines.

A. D. SELBY.

THRIPS AND LETTUCE.

I see a great deal of talk about stem-rot and fungi at the roots of plants, but the proper name for nine out of ten cases is thrips. If the man who finds stem-rot looks closely he will find a little black half fly and half mosquito-looking insect. It first attacks the tender leaves of the plant and punctures them and when they open there is a black ring of rot around the edges. If the house is kept closed, as in cloudy weather, leaf-rot is the consequence. It next deposits its eggs in the top soil and soon a grub makes its appearance. This is so small that it is almost impossible to detect it with the naked eye. It looks like a small maggot, but under a strong glass it has all the appearance of thrips, except in color; but as it gets older it turns brown.

Now this little fellow goes down to the extremities of the roots and destroys the fiber. The stem as well as the roots take on a brown, dirty appearance, as if they had been in ground that had too much acid. As long as it remains cloudy the inect stays in the ground, but as it gets older it comes to the surface. If on a bright day, about 2 o'clock, you will take away from your lettuce some of the leaves that have been on the ground and shake them you will see a shower of these insects.

I saw where some one asked about his lettuce plants damping or being attacked by mildew. If the party will notice in the future he will, by taking off some of the leaves that have fallen and spreading them out on a piece of paper, find thrips. They are very small at this stage. They puncture the small plants at the top of the ground and the plant falls over and dies.

As to the remedy, the only thing I have been able to do is to hold the temperature down. The fly will lay its eggs, but they will not hatch when it is cold. When they get out of the ground and on the lettuce, smoke will fix them. I do not know any remedy while they are in the ground and would be glad for any information on that point.

TWO "NEW CREATIONS" IN BUSH LIMAS

Nature surely has surpassed herself! In a single season she has outstripped all efforts of man. In fact, such distinct new types have never even been dreamed of before!

Look at the illustrations shown of the BURPEE IMPROVED and FORDHOOK BUSH LIMAS, recall to mind the largest and best pods of Lima Beans you have ever seen, and you must agree with us that this is a most remarkable find. To learn just what they really are and how they were discovered, kindly study pages 10 to 15 of THE FARM ANNUAL FOR 1907. These two most unique new Bush Limas will be worth many thousands of dollars annually to the gardeners of America. They are undoubtedly the "Greatest Novelties of the Age."

The Burpee Improved is an entirely "New Creation." The pods are truly enormous in size, borne in great abundance upon bushes two and one-half feet high by two feet across. The beans are both larger and thicker than those of the popular Burpee Bush Lima or any strain of the large White Pole Lima.

Fordhook Bush Lima. This is altogether unique. Nothing like it has ever been seen before. It is the first and only stiffly erect Bush form of the fat "Potato Lima." Both pods and beans are twice the size of Dreer's and more than half again as large as the Challenger Pole Lima.

$1115.00 in Cash Prizes for 1907

With one prize of $150.00, several of $50.00 each we will pay a total of $1115.00 on these Two New Bush Limas. For particulars see pages 28 and 199 of BURPEE'S FARM ANNUAL FOR 1907.

These Bush Limas are sold only in sealed packets. Each packet contains twelve perfect hand-picked beans. Per pkt., 25c—less the discount of one-third on retail packets.—making 3 pkts. for 50c; 6 pkts. for $1.00 or $2.00 per dozen pkts., postpaid, and assorted as desired.

Seed Trade News.

Pres., Henry W. Wood, Richmond, Va.; First Vice-Pres., Charles Burge, Toledo, O.; Sec'y and Treas., C. E. Kendel, Cleveland. The 25th annual meeting will be held at New York City, June, 1907.

THE mail trade is beginning to take on seasonable activity and a big rush is certain for the next sixty days.

THE wholesalers and jobbers are on the jump. They will be cleaned up in fine shape if business holds to as late a date as usual.

IT is reported that some of the California growers will have to cut their onion seed acreage down from lack of bulbs to plant.

IN the east the seed trade reports market gardeners slow in placing orders, because of the cold weather of the latter part of February.

FAWCETT BROS. Co. has started in the seed and agricultural implement business at 1522 Commerce street, Tacoma, Wash. H. I. Fawcett is manager.

IT is reported that the stock of seeds that Sears, Roebuck & Co. had arranged for, of the 1906 crop, and which they had no use for on account of cutting out their seed department, has been pretty well disposed of to other parties.

THE pea growers report that one-half the acreages for the coming year's plantings have been secured at about the same terms as last year. It is thought that the additional acreage needed may not be secured without paying considerably higher prices.

THE general report is that mail business for the first two months of the year is no more than equal to last season. While there are houses that report an increase, others are non-commital, and and it is a fair deduction that the average returns from catalogues are to date not ahead of a year ago. Pretty nearly every house has all it can do, both counter trade and mail, during March and April. Gains are much easier to handle in January and February than in the next two months, when every one will be rushed.

CHARLES DICKINSON, vice-president of the Albert Dickinson Co., Chicago grass seed dealer, was on the Pennsylvania's eighteen hour train that went into the Conemaugh river near Johnstown, Pa.,

THE present congress expires next Monday by limitation. There will be no legislation of consequence affecting either the seed trade or other interests, aside from that contained in the usual appropriation bills.

JAS. VICK'S SONS, Rochester, are reported to have leased the farm of W. D. Auchter, at South Greece, near Spencerport, N. Y., for a term of years. The tract consists of ninety acres and it is understood thirty acres of it will next summer be planted to asters for seed.

A NEW YORK importer tried to get asparagus seeds admitted duty free as crude drugs, but the board of general appraisers thought that all that was crude about the case was the contention, and reaffirmed the old ruling.

IN Collier's Weekly for February 23 two pages are devoted to an "exposure" of modern methods of influencing public opinion, being mainly an account of the methods of William Wolf Smith, of Washington, who has represented the seedsmen in their campaign against free seeds.

LATEST reports from Holland are of considerable frost in late January, after mild weather had caused the removal of winter coverings. It is feared some injury may have been done to hyacinths.

IMPORTS.

The imports of seeds through the port of New York for the week ending February 16 were as follows:

Kind.	Bags.	Val.	Kind.	Bags.	Val.
Annatto	31	$ 458	Clover	2,308	$57,602
Canary	796	1,368	Grass	763	6,822

Castor	531	2,523	Rape	5	37
Celery	122	1,564	Other	..	3,534

In the same period the imports of trees and plants were valued at $3,968.

THE long white radishes, Vienna, Pearl and Icicle, are becoming very popular with planters and the old favorite long scarlet is falling back.

VISITED CHICAGO:—John Bodger, Jr., of John Bodger & Sons, Gardena, Cal., returning from the east. He reports business good all along the line.

WM. A. BRUCE, for ten years shipping clerk for J. M. Thorburn & Co., New York, and before that connected with Peter Henderson & Co. and the Cleveland Seed Co. for many years, died at his home in Jersey City February 12.

THE Leonard Seed Co., Chicago, has opened a store at Jefferson Park. This store is for the convenience of the market gardeners in the northwest section of Chicago and is near to the farm, trial ground and onion set warehouse of the company.

JOHNSON & MUSSER Seed Co., Los Angeles, Cal., have a new muskmelon for which they predict a wonderful future, saying "its flavor is as near like the Ambrosia of the gods as anything we know." The melons keep from three to six months and are not ready to eat until the rind becomes slightly softened and moist. They say they have only eighty ounces of seed, which they offer to local planters at $2 per ounce. A few melons on hand are offered at $1 each.

J. KEUR, of C. Keur & Son, Hillegom, Holland, is traveling through the west with two assistants. The firm has a permanent representative in this country at 334 The Bourse, Philadelphia. Mr. Keur says the business being booked in the United States this spring is the heaviest in the history of the house, and they have been coming here for thirteen years.

THE situation generally in the seed trade is reported to be satisfactory. There seems to be enough onion seed for the needs of the time and no serious shortage of any but what are termed "special stock" of the globe kinds is anticipated. The canners now seem to be supplied with the peas that were so short awhile back and there is no special run on anything in particular. Onion sets are well cleaned up and this market is expected to hold stiff. Present quotations are $2.50 for red and yellow and $3 for white.

THE WARD SEED CATALOGUE.

After wasting three weeks in the fruitless attempt to secure from the post-office department a reversal of the ruling of the postmaster at Chicago, Montgomery Ward & Co. have concluded that the advancing season necessitates the mailing of their seed catalogue without further delay. They are therefore sending out the books without the prize offers they originally contained.

As reported exclusively in the REVIEW, the post-office refused to admit the Ward seed catalogue to the mails because of these prize offers. It was necessary to call back 50,000 books which were ready for mailing, open the envelopes, strip off the outside four pages (the books were saddle stitched), rerun the four pages, using other matter in place of the prize offers, rebind and remail. It was not so great a task with that part of the edition which was not off the press when the first lot were held up—but it meant a lot of money to Ward & Co., to say nothing of the annoyance it caused, which any seedsman knows was considerable. It is safe to say, without having direct authority for it, that Ward & Co. will not let the matter rest until they have exhausted every effort to secure a different ruling on their prize offers. They feel that there is nothing in any way objectionable about them and call the department's attention to the fact that many reputable seedsmen make offers identical with their own and have never been interfered with; that such offers have this season gone out in large editions.

To the seed trade the action of the post-office people appears inexplicable.

RICE AND THE CANNERS.

A seedsman who was at Buffalo during the convention writes: "Many pea canners will can sixty per cent of Rice this year; they will probably all can Rice another year."

CALIFORNIA CROP CONDITIONS.

Lester L. Morse writes under date of San Francisco, February 23: "Relative to present crop conditions, would say that the continued wet weather has made planting very late, but practically everything is now in and except for the inconvenience and extra expense in getting our planting done there is nothing at present to indicate there will be any shortages.

"The early crops are now needing attention, and we shall need clear weather for two or three weeks in order to save the crops that now need hoeing."

IOWA SEED LEGISLATION.

A newspaper report dated Des Moines, Ia., February 23, says: "The seedsmen in this state are breathing easier; impending legislation along the line of pure seeds has been modified and its threatening phases eliminated. Since the bill was introduced in the state legislature the state house has been the scene of some protracted conferences between the committee of the legislature and the seed dealers, headed by Charles N. Page, the local seedsman. H. A. Johns, of the Sioux City Seed and Nursery Co., N. J. Burt, of Burlington, and several others made representations that the law as proposed was not only inimical to the trade but would, in fact, largely turn over to outside interests the enormous business in farm seeds now done in the state. The result has been that a large number of changes have been made in the bill, making it acceptable to the seed dealers and at the same time safeguarding the interests of the farmers in pure seeds."

this company is an evidence of the growth of the dry farming industry in this state, as the concern will seek to supply the dry farmers' demands for acclimated seeds of all descriptions. The officers of the company are: President, Ora Haley, Laramie; vice-president, Dr. V. T. Cooke, Cheyenne; secretary and treasurer, Prof. B. C. Buffum, Laramie. Governor B. B. Brooks is one of the stockholders. The company's seeds will not be on the market for two years at least, and during that time seeds grown elsewhere will be handled.

E. L. COY RETIRES.

Edward L. Coy, who for fifty years has been engaged in the seed-growing business in Washington county, New York, making a specialty of potatoes and later of cucumbers, has sold out to the Jerome B. Rice Seed Co. and retired. He sends a notice to the trade in a circular issued from Melrose, Mass., where he has made his home for some years, which is in part as follows:

"I much regret to be obliged to inform you that on account of my age (76 years) and physical disability resulting from it, I find myself utterly unable to carry on my seed-growing business any longer, and my physician advises me that I positively must give it up. I regret this very much, for I have been growing seeds in this same locality for more than fifty years, and have not only enjoyed the work but have formed many pleasant acquaintances and business relations with leading seedsmen throughout the country.

"I have arranged with the Jerome B. Rice Seed Co., Cambridge, N. Y., to succeed me, and have turned over to them my stock seeds, with the exception of special stocks with which I have been entrusted, as well as my growers, and the good will of my business.

"For many years Jerome B. Rice and I have worked side by side in Washington county, and in the same territory, without conflicting or clashing. Several years ago we united in opposing the introduction of cucumber seed machines into Washington county, and succeeded, so that all the seed grown there is carefully harvested by hand, which makes the seed white and much superior in appearance to machine-cleaned stock.

"I consider Washington county, New York, to be the best locality in the United States for the uniformly successful growing of cucumber seed. Many other seeds are grown there successfully, but cucumber has been my specialty for several years, and the demand for same has been so great as to give me about all I could do."

HOME SAVED SWEET CORN.

There is danger that much of the corn which has been saved for seed throughout the northwest may be useless for that purpose and warning is given to the farmers to assure themselves betimes that their seed corn is all right. A. K. Bush, a former member of the state legislature from Olmstead county, Minnesota, who is now in charge of the seed testing department of Northrup, King & Co., of Minneapolis, estimates that fully forty per cent of the seed corn is no good.

"I have not tested much Minnesota seed except our own," said Mr. Bush recently, "but I have the most reliable information from South Dakota and North Dakota that a large proportion of the corn is useless. The northwest has never had such bad seed. Last fall was unusually wet and the grain had little opportunity to dry out. If corn freezes while green the germ is killed. As the conditions were exactly the same in this state as in the Dakotas, it follows that seed corn is in a similar condition.

"Usually farmers do not test their seed until just before planting time, and if it should prove to be bad, they are in a serious predicament.

"For several years corn has increased in importance in this state and it is now one of the leading crops. A loss of a large portion of the seed would be a serious misfortune to the farmers, and consequently to the state."

Jesse E. Northrup, of Northrup, King & Co., realizing the importance to the state of insuring a bountiful corn crop next year, has authorized the newspapers to announce to the farmers that his firm will test free of charge all seed corn sent to it for that purpose, and send a careful report.

LONGIFLORUM AND VALLEY.

We would like to know the temperature at which longiflorum bulbs and valley pips should be carried in cold storage. H. H. C.

We store our lily of the valley pips at about 26 degrees and our Japanese lilies at about 34 degrees. We have found that the latter temperature keeps the longiflorums in splendid condition for summer and autumn forcing.

WM. HAGEMANN & Co.

W. W. RAWSON CO.

This well known Boston firm first opened for business at 34 South Market street in 1884, Everett & Gleason being bought out. Mr. Gleason stayed with the new firm some time and is now a member of the Schlegel & Fottler Co. Mr. Bliss, the well known pea disseminator, was also employed here. In 1897 a move was made to 12 and 13 Faneuil Hall square, one-half of the lower floor being occupied. This was the first occasion of a Boston seed house locating on the ground floor; other houses have since followed suit. In 1900 the increase of business necessitated the taking over of the whole building.

On March 23, 1906, a disastrous fire practically wiped out the Rawson company's building and stock. Quite a little business was transacted in the burned building without a roof until July, when the firm moved to its present commodious quarters at 5 Union street. A pleasing feature in the new building is an excellent waiting-room provided with horticultural publications, etc.

All attention is now given to seeds, bulbs and plants. Even poultry supplies are carried. The house intends in the future to be strictly a specialty one. The firm will offer some choice novelties in flower and vegetable seeds in 1907. There will be a splendid lot of new dahlias, raised in Massachusetts, also a new gladioli, said to be a vast improvement on Princeps, carrying eight to ten flowers at a time and similar in color to Richmond rose.

Maurice Fuld, who is manager for W. W. Rawson & Co., is also secretary of the newly formed New England Dahlia Society. W. W. Rawson, the head of the concern, is the widely known Arlington vegetable forcer, and his son is associated with him in his many activities.

SPENCER TYPE OF SWEET PEAS.

In my seeds of the new Spencer type of sweet pea last spring I found that the imported seed would not germinate if planted early in cold ground. We had heavy cold rains and the majority rotted. Later planting gave better results. Therefore I would counsel florists not to sow the new type seed until the soil is fairly dry and warm.

In most catalogues I notice that the advice is still given to hoe the earth up to the growing plants. This does not matter in a dry season, but in a wet one the wet earth rots out the vine at the crown and the plant dies. The experiments of both the Rev. W. T. Hutchins and myself conducted through years conclusively proved this.

Magee Pratt.

ASTILBE DAVIDI.

Astilbe Davidi is a new hardy plant of great promise from western China. It is closely allied to the long-known pink-flowered herbaceous spiræa, Astilbe Chinensis, but differs in much taller growth, reaching five or six feet when established in rich, moist soil, and in later blooming, as well as the color of the massive inflorescence, which is rosy purple with blue anthers in Davidi and light pink in Chinensis. The plants are absolutely hardy, needing no protection but their own feathery foliage, which dies down in winter, as in all species of the genus. The bloom heads, which are often nearly two feet long, appear in late July. They are very showy, and are carried in a noticeably erect manner. The foliage retains its decorative appearances until late in autumn. This excellent novelty, as well as other members of the genus, may be easily grown in every garden, but appears to best advantage when planted in rich soil. It is so hardy and apparently long-lived that it should readily find favor. It seeds with some freedom, and may readily be increased in this manner or by division of the clumps in spring or fall.—Rural New-Yorker.

NEPHROLEPIS EXALTATA,

The fronds of Nephrolepis exaltata arise in clumps, and at their bases produce long stolons covered with whitish scales and carrying with them buds which are capable of producing plants at some distance from the parent. This involves a facility of propagation which has been so largely availed of as probably to account for the lack of variation in this species until recent years, since sports are far more apt to occur through seeds or spores than through buds. H. B. May has, moreover, informed me of the singular fact that when spores of N. exaltata are sown that species has never appeared in its own form in the resulting crop, which invariably consists of a batch of an allied but distinct and softer-fronded type, N. Zollingeriana or rufescens. So persistently indeed has this occurred that sowings of the normal form have been discontinued. As against this, however, we have the fact that the highly decomposite varieties recently obtained are undoubtedly referable to N. exaltata, and have presumably originated from spores of that species. Unfortunately, however, for the scientist, the members of the trade, with whom these variants largely originate, can tell us little or nothing of their origin. The ferns are raised by millions from spores, and in immense numbers by other propagative means, such as buds, stoloniferous or other, and every now and again a prize turns up among the resulting plants, probably only developing its character when it has been shifted more than once.—Gardeners' Chronicle.

The florists are busy cutting good stock and it is being cleaned up all the time. Funeral work has been in extra demand for the last month. Roses were not so plentiful as they might have been, but carnations helped out. Dull weather did not seem to check carnations much and quality has been good all winter. Easter lilies will be a little short crop.

Current Comment.

What January lacked in trade activity and other favorable conditions is more than being compensated for in opposite extremes the present month. This means balmy days, plenty of good stock and a right brisk demand for everything. Socially, we are keeping up with the procession, having recently entertained such notables as Miss Olga Nethersole and William Jennings Bryan, whose visits certainly gave impetus to trade. We cannot omit speaking of a fine run of wedding work, where metropolitan ideas were displayed, and never were there so many orchids and valley used.

As for funeral orders, there is no limit to them, the high death rate being largely due to atmospheric conditions. Our rainy season begins in November and continues until late in the spring and the Oregonian has become so accustomed to this order of things that when we experience a week or two of advanced spring weather the effect is similar to what is known as an open winter in the east.

St. Valentine's day relieved the market of the entire supply of violets and much other fine stock. We are never caught napping on that date and all our foolish ideas were brought into action. In the same week began the Chinese New Year, which is celebrated in true celestial fashion by our 3,000 Mongolian inhabitants. When we first came to the coast we rebelled against the seeming necessity of mastering the Chinese language, which is as essential here as German is in Milwaukee. While we do not agree with John in his ideas of dress and diet, nevertheless we admire his love for flowers and his ability to drive a bargain. This event is a good time to dispose of a surplus stock of azaleas and we were prepared for it. When purchasing cut flowers the highly scented ones are his favorites.

At this writing there is an abundance of everything of the finest quality and we hope this may continue until the end of the season.

Closely following the cold snap in January we were visited by a severe storm of sleet and rain, which was appropriately termed by the press, silver thaw. It lasted two days and, while beautiful to look upon, this phenomenon proved most disastrous to the trees and shrubs. Many grand old trees, which were the pride of pioneers and pleasure of the present generation, were crippled beyond recognition by the heavy coating of ice. The more tender ones were completely ruined by the weight of their burden. The city park, the plaza and several of our fine estates, which it has taken a half century to beautify, will be disfigured for years to come. We have never seen its equal and everything will get a pruning this spring, whether it is needed or not.

A. Currie, Jr., representing Currie Bros. Co., of Milwaukee, is here making a successful effort to obtain some of the coast trade. H. J. M.

The Market.

We are now well into Lent and business is as well as we can expect. Funeral orders have provided the bulk of the receipts of the retailers for the last two weeks and trade in this line is good. The weather is warm again, with light showers every few days, and everything is conducive to an abundance of blooms.

The price of carnations has taken another drop, owing to their quantity, and the best fancy sorts do not net the growers more than $2.50 per hundred, while plainer sorts can be had at from $1 to $1.50 per hundred.

Roses have not shared this fate and good Brides, Beauties and Maids are yet in short supply and only medium quality. We have been expecting a slump in prices, but they will not be any cheaper until the supply is larger.

Bulbous stock is low in price. Paper Whites, although not as plentiful as they have been, can be purchased at $5 per thousand and single and double daffodils at only a short advance on these figures. Indoor bulb stock, such as valley and Romans, is only in fair demand and there is plenty to supply all comers. Romans have not been in great favor this season and only a few Dutch hyacinths have been offered for sale in the stores. A few good tulips are seen, but they are also of slow sale.

Various Notes.

Alex Mann, Jr., and Frank Shibeley will shortly reëstablish themselves on Sutter street, near Polk. This neighborhood will evidently be the coming floral center, as many of the leading firms are represented in the vicinity mentioned.

Mrs. Gooch, the well-known violet grower of Ocean View, has five acres planted in callas for the coming season. She finds the business of shipping the bulbs lucrative and will have many thousands for the fall trade.

The retailers in Oakland have been enjoying a big share of funeral work for the last two weeks. The death of the postmaster during the last few days added materially to the number of big orders.

R. L. Thompson, formerly of southern California, is in town on a few weeks' visit. Mr. Thompson has not been in this region for several years and the change is surprising from what we were once upon a time. The gigantic ruins of Frisco are a sight that appalls even the CHANCES ON THE COAST.

We have just moved to Oregon from Cuba and intend to start growing flowers and seeds commercially. I wish some grower on the coast would be kind enough to advise me what would be best to grow in this section. The ground is rich in potash and carnations of many varieties stand the winter in open ground without protection. C. H. B.

Without knowing what experience in growing either plants or seeds the inquirer may have had, it is rather hard to advise what might be the most profitable. The nursery and florists' businesses are at the present time on this coast very profitable enterprises and there is no reason why they should not remain so for some time to come. If it is the intention to erect greenhouses and grow flowers for either the Portland or Seattle markets, abundant output can be had for everything raised at good prices, as the supply has as yet not been equal to the demand and a great portion of the flowers sold at these towns is brought from San Francisco and vicinity; in fact, some of the largest growers ship almost exclusively to those places.

If, on the other hand, it is the intention to go into the regular nursery business the chances are equally as good for making money. It is well to specialize, however, to a certain extent and grow either roses, hardy ornamental trees or fruit trees.

The growing of vegetable and some flower seeds is yet in its infancy on this coast and, as the soil of Oregon is especially adapted for strong feeding vegetables, there is no risk providing the grower has sufficient pluck to stay with it until the returns begin to come in.

Sweet peas have been a well paying crop for several years and the demand for the most popular flowering sorts at present is much greater than the supply. They are of the easiest culture and I see no reason why C. H. B. could not devote a few acres to them at a good profit. The returns can be had without waiting several years, as is necessary in plant growing, or with such an expenditure of money as is necessary to erect greenhouses for the growth of cut flowers. G.

TWIN CITIES.

The Market.

The trade generally anticipated a drop in business during the Lenten season, but up to the present it is hardly noticeable. Bright weather has not only helped trade, but has put an entirely different aspect on the market.

Stock is plentiful and the quality is much better than what we have had at any time during the season. Killarney roses are at the climax of perfection; the color is good and the stems are strong. In consequence, the demand for good blooms of this variety has been excellent. All other varieties are fine and the price is maintained without any difficulty. Carnations are about equal to the demand.

Bulb stock has taken a decided brace, especially tulips. Violets have been in great demand, the supply of home-grown stock being quite limited.

Funeral work has been heavier than we have had it for some time, and expensive pieces have been turned out.

Minneapolis.

A visit to the plant of the Minneapolis Floral Co. found the Easter stock in good condition. Mr. Monson counts on having 10,000 lilies to offer, and from their appearance at the present time they are going to be of the best quality. Some of their azaleas are already in cool houses, but are not far enough advanced to count on any loss on them. In all they have about 1,800 fine hydrangeas. Spireas are grown to some extent, but not so much so as in previous seasons. They have some fine white lilacs in bloom which command a ready sale. They have a large number of carnation cuttings planted. Victory seems to be the favorite. Craig did not give them the satisfactory results expected.

Between table decorations and funeral orders Ralph Latham has had about all he could attend to. He contemplates enlarging his place considerably this summer.

The Whitted Floral Co. has turned over considerable stock of late, the demand for bulb stock and violets being unusually heavy.

St. Paul.

Aug F. Vogt is to be congratulated on the arrival of a fine baby boy.

E. F. Lemke continues to offer some of the finest violets ever on sale here. Business, he says, keeps up nicely.

Holm & Olson have added two large mahogany show cases which give their place a finished effect.

Robt. C. Seeger, of the Seeger Floral Co., has discontinued business and is now engaged in Chicago.

The plant of L. L. May & Co. gives every promise of an abundant Easter crop. Their lilies will all be in and other plants are looking fine. Their roses are all in crop. Enchantress carnations are also good. Trade in the retail department is heavy. Funeral work keeps them busy. FELIX.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

J. R. Hellenthal has remodeled his store and put in a large mirror. Stock at the greenhouses is looking first-class. Roses are in heavy crop, with the last two weeks of sunshine the growers are making heavy cuts. Lilies are coming along nicely, just right for Easter; also a lot of hybrid roses and Baby Ramblers. Mr. Hellenthal has a sport of Enchantress, a cerise pink, well built flower, more fringed than Enchantress. The flower is three and one-half inches in diameter. His carnations are a grand sight and are in heavy crop. His grower may be credited with the faculty of knowing how to get the best results out of this class of stock. C. M. J.

NURSERY NEWS.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF NURSERYMEN.

Pres., Orlando Harrison, Berlin, Md.; Vice-Pres., J. W. Hill, Des Moines, Ia.; Sec'y, Geo. C. Seager, Rochester; Treas. C. L. Yates, Rochester. The 32d annual convention will be held at Detroit, Mich., June, 1907.

Of the white lilacs, Frau Bertha Dammann is one of the best; a free bloomer, with medium-sized flowers borne in large panicles.

Prof. A. F. Burgess, Ohio state inspector of orchards and nurseries, has resigned and will go to Massachusetts, where he will have charge of the state experiments to kill the gypsy and brown-tailed moths.

President Orlando Harrison, of the American Association of Nurserymen, says it is high time the nurserymen were raising prices: "Turn your attention from seeing how cheaply you can produce stock to seeing how good stock you can produce."

PACIFIC COAST NURSERIES.

Riverside, Wash.—J. A. Fansler, of Pogue Prairie, and F. W. Hoffman, of Wenatchee, will establish a nursery on Evergreen ranch, Pogue Prairie, and another at Wenatchee. They will this year plant at each place about 50,000 apple root grafts and 4,000 cherry trees. A. T. Gossman and F. L. Kimball, representing the Columbia and Okanogan Nursery Co., have been in Riverside for several days, looking up a location for a nursery. Their company already has nurseries in Wenatchee and Chelan.

PRIVET CUTTINGS.

Privet, large or small, is good stock to have on hand, the demand for it is constantly increasing. Although it would have been better, perhaps, if the cuttings had been taken off the hedges, or the other stock plants, a month or two ago and buried, after being tied up in bundles in sand or soil until spring, still it is not yet too late to do the work if the young wood is all right, which can easily be discerned by observing if the bark is firm and green on the wood. If it is, it is in good condition. If the wood is winter-killed the bark will come off almost at a touch, and besides, it will have changed on the under side from green to a brownish black. When the wood is taken off for cuttings it can be cut up into the proper cutting lengths now or simply tied up in bundles as it is cut off the bushes, and the cuttings made just before putting them in the nursery rows in early spring. In whichever case, they ought, even now, to be buried, or at least covered and left so until spring weather sets in and nursery work gets under way. R. R.

PERENNIAL PLANTS.

Seeds of perennial plants are usually sown in the late summer or autumn in order that they may develop into such a state of maturity as to enable them to flower the year following. All these plants need wintering in coldframes, or at least most of them do. Seed of perennials sown now will not flower this year. I mean those that are commonly known as herbaceous plants. There are a few perennials that flower from seed sown within the year, but if seed perennials or herbaceous plants are sown in the spring much stronger plants can be had than from fall-sown seed, and that with less trouble with the plants in their small state. Whether spring or fall sowing is resorted to, the seedlings should be transplanted, when they are fit to handle, into flats and allowed to remain in these until they show signs of crowding and have made good roots. When they have reached that stage it will pay to pot them up. When the young plants are outdoors they should have the protection of an uncovered frame, or simply a 12-inch board back and front and at the ends of each batch. This will protect them from winds and prevent their drying too quickly. Plants grown in pots are nowadays appreciated by customers and, besides, growers find it the most expeditious method. R. R.

PROPAGATION OF CONIFERAE.

Will you kindly tell me when to propagate arbor-vitæ, blue spruce and other shrubbery? O. H. C.

Thuya occidentalis, the common American arbor-vitæ, propagates readily from seeds sown either outdoors or in a greenhouse in April. If outdoors, keep the soil moist. A light mulching of short, strawy litter may be spread over the ground to hold the moisture, removing it as the seedlings appear. There are many named varieties of T. occidentalis, which are usually grafted on seedlings of the common type in spring or early summer under glass. They also may be increased by cuttings taken in late summer and placed in a frame or cold greenhouse. They will be calloused before spring, and if then given some bottom heat will soon make roots. Thuya gigantea may be increased by either cuttings or grafting. In selecting cuttings those rubbed off with a heel are to be preferred. The soil should be of a sandy nature.

The various retinisporas, such as plumosa, plumosa aurea, pisifera, ericoides, obtusa, etc., propagate readily from young, side-shoot cuttings in the same way as the thuyas. Seed may also be used, but cuttings preserve the type best. August is a good month to propagate them in coldframes. Seed is probably best sown under glass in early spring, gradually hardened off and then transplanted to the open ground.

The various pines are raised from seed sown in coldframes early in spring in light mold and covered thinly. The young seedlings need protecting by lath shades or screens during the hot, dry weather and should be kept moist but not wet. Pinus Strobus, if soaked in warm water for twenty-four hours before sowing, will germinate much quicker and more readily.

The piceas, of which the blue spruce is a representative, are chiefly increased by seed sowing. The seed, if kept cool during winter, can be sown early in spring in beds outdoors or in coldframes. Seedlings will need the lath screen protection afforded other coniferæ. The rarer sorts, like P. pungens, are usually propagated by grafting on Picea alba or excelsa, also by layering. The stocks are potted up and kept close and moist until established, usually in late summer. They are then gradually hardened. The grafting is done in the greenhouse from January to March. Veneer grafting is best where stock and scion are of equal size, but side grafting may also be done with success. Wax the grafts over thoroughly, place in a close frame and syringe freely until well started. Gradually harden off. Picea pungens seedlings are less desirable than grafted plants, as they lack the beautiful blue color and are more weedy in habit.

The various abies, of which A. pectinata, silver fir; A. balsamea, balsam fir; A. Nordmanniana, A. concolor, white fir; A. Pinsapo, Spanish fir; and A. Fraseri are well-known varieties, can be propagated by either seed sowing or grafting. The latter process is more easy than in the case of Picea pungens. In the case of juniperus, seeds do not germinate until the second or third year. Grafting and root cuttings are all used as methods of increasing stock. Cuttings should be of wood nearly mature, in a frame or greenhouse. Layering may also be resorted to. C.

SHRUBS FOR A SUCCESSION.

The importance of obtaining a succession of bloom in a shrubbery planting scheme has been pointed out by the National Council of Horticulture. In selecting the varieties to produce this there is room for a large variance of choice; tastes will vary; the climate, soil and the care given the plants should be considered. But the following list of twelve shrubs will be found to give good results with little care:

Forsythia, or golden bell; Cydonia Japonica, or Japan quince; Viburnum Opulis steralis, or snowball; Spiræa Van Houttei, or white spiræa; Lonicera x Tatarica, or upright honeysuckle; Weigela rosea, or rose-colored weigela; philadelphus, or mock orange; syringa, or lilac; Spiræa callosa, or pink spiræa; Spiræa Anthony Waterer, or dwarf spiræa; Hibiscus Syriacus, or althæa; Hydrangea paniculata grandiflora, or common hydrangea.

Other shrubs which are worthy of planting in the springtime are Hercules' club, botanically known as Aralia spinosa; the purple and the green-leaved barberry; several varieties of the dogwood and the flowering locust.

Next to trees and shrubbery in the consideration of a planting scheme come perennials. When once planted these need little care from year to year. The anemone, foxglove, hollyhocks, asters, poppies, peonies, chrysanthemums, phlox, coreopsis, larkspur, Golden Glow, and others that have been handed down from our grandfathers' time, but have been much improved in the descent, will be found worthy of trial.

GREENHOUSE A NECESSITY.

It makes no difference how small a nursery a man may have, he will need a greenhouse. There is no doubt about that, and he who is without one had better erect one as soon as possible. After he has it he will wonder how in the world he ever got along without one.

Seeds of trees and shrubs, as well as of perennials, germinate when sown or planted outdoors, in frames or otherwise; we know that. We also know, however, that they cannot be controlled when disposed of in that way with the same output of labor and exertion as they can when greenhouse space is available, with its attendant equipment for regulation of temperature and atmosphere. And besides all this, there are many things in the line of cuttings next to impossible to root outdoors, unless, perhaps, with the aid of a hotbed. Whereas, with a greenhouse where bottom heat, however slight, is available, no difficulty presents itself in rooting the same thing. R. R.

TOLEDO, OHIO.

One of the new enterprises of Toledo is the Perennial Gardens Co., which erected last fall several fine new greenhouses on its property on Broadway in Miami. The grounds embrace five acres and are located on the Maumee valley belt. Last year the attention of many people on their way to Maumee was attracted by the bright field of hardy perennials, which were planted so that they might be seen by all passing. This year a much larger number of varieties will please the eye of all who happen to take a trolley ride on the river belt line. The company will grow flowering and ornamental shrubs, hardy perennial plants, pot plants and fruit and shade trees. This is Toledo's first nursery.

The grounds were thoroughly tiled last fall and six greenhouses 18x125 feet and a work shed 30x100 feet were erected. The company was organized eleven months ago and some well known Toledoans are interested in the concern. The president of the company is Chas. J. S. Phillips; F. H. Wolfman, vice-president; T. J. Ziems, secretary; F. Grafe, treasurer, and J. L. Schiller, manager.

Collegeville, Pa.—A part of the roof of the greenhouse of F. C. Prizer was crushed by the weight of the recent heavy snow.

20,000 PEONIES

FOR EARLY SPRING PLANTING

This list comprises a great many choice and rare varieties, some of which have never before been offered to the trade in quantities. The stock is now in our storage sheds and can be shipped as soon as the weather will permit. Nothing but selected three to six eye divisions will be sent out.

Bridgeport, Conn.—James Horan & Son had a nice stock of cherry trees which sold well for dinner-table centerpieces for Washington's birthday.

Seguin, Tex.—H. L. Neal recently caught his head in a loop of wire that was suspended from the roof of his greenhouse. The shock threw him violently, wrenching the tendons in his left shoulder and dislocating the collar bone. He says he will never do jury duty in a capital case, for he wouldn't agree to break the neck of a dog after this experience.

WAYSIDE NOTES.

Mark Aitken, of Springfield, Mass., has given up growing bedding plants, finding it more profitable to use all available space for flowering stock, of which he has an increasing demand.

J. Schlatter & Son, of Springfield, are stocked up for a big cemetery demand.

Frank Burfitt has the finest lilies to be seen in the vicinity of Springfield. He says there is something in the growing and not all in the bulb.

I understand that A. N. Pierson, at Cromwell, Conn., intends throwing out his entire stock of old roses and has 125,000 fine, thrifty, young plants coming on to take their place. He has an immense stock in sight for Easter.

H. W. Field, of Northampton, Mass., has his store finely fitted up, with a capital show window that sets it off to advantage. Those grand Enchantress and the white seedling from Patten, which Grower Harry Sinclair believes is the best of its class, are also attractions.

John Clark, the right bower of the H. E. Fiske Co., of Somerville, Mass., was badly shaken up in the railroad accident which occurred here recently and could hardly believe he was as sound as before until his palm was crossed by the claim agent. Being in the midst of a rush it was fortunate that it was no worse, as seedsmen are valuable.

The Salisbury estate, at Worcester, Mass., will be given over to the Arts and Crafts Institute, which will continue the greenhouses with Charles Carlson in charge. This is his thirty-second year as superintendent. W. M.

ELBERON, N. J.

The Elberon Horticultural Society held its regular meeting February 18, President Robertson in the chair and a goodly number present. James Kennedy, superintendent for G. W. Young, read an interesting and instructive paper on "Outdoor Roses." An interesting discussion followed.

Seldom has there been such a large exhibit of cut flowers as at this meeting. The exhibitors and their principal exhibits were: Vase of Freesia Purity, by P. Murray; gardenias, by W. D. Robertson; Stock Beauty of Nice and a vase of Carnation Victory, by A. Bauer; vase of calla lilies, by H. Wood; bouquet of Princess of Wales violets, by A. Greil; vase of tulips, by J. Kennedy; bouquet of California violets, by F. Dettlinger; vase of carnations, by E. Petzel; collection of cut flowers, by W. Swain, and a vase of seedling carnations, by W. Kennedy, of Redbanks. G. M.

GEISTOWN, PA.—Samuel H. Zimmerman has gone out of business.

Announcement—Aristocrat

As we have not made all the deliveries of Aristocrat as promised, we beg to announce to our patrons that all orders are being filled strictly in rotation and all orders will be completed by the 20th of March, as we have 50,000 cuttings in the sand nearly rooted and 150,000 cuttings that have been put in during the past ten days. These will be ready for delivery before the end of March, which is not too late for Aristocrat, as it is a very rapid grower, free from disease and will do as well as earlier cuttings when benched in the fall. The variety is an easy rooter, but owing to the very unfavorable weather, cuttings did not root as quickly as we expected; besides we are growing them cool, which takes a little longer. All of the stock we have sent out has given the best of satisfaction, as it is our aim to see that every cutting is first-class in every respect.

We wish to thank our patrons for their patience and assuring you of our very best attention and that your order will be filled by the time stated.

MABELLE

NEW PINK CARNATION FOR 1907

Color—A peculiar shade of lovely pink, with a faint yellowish cast; several shades lighter than the Lawson. Unlike most pinks, the brightest sun does not injure the color. Size—3 to 4 inches in diameter when established. Odor—Pleasing, but not strong. Stems—Invariably strong, but always graceful, ranging from 12 to 30 inches during the season. Habit, etc.—A very quick, active grower, making specimen plants in a short time, even from late cuttings. On account of its rapid growth, requires supporting very soon after benching. Gets away rapidly, blooms early and gives long stems right from the start. Productiveness—Prodigious is the best word we know of to use here. It is the most incessant bloomer, early and late, we have ever grown. Stock limited. No discount. Price $12.00 per 100; $100.00 per 1000.

PITTSBURG.

The Market.

We are now well into the Lenten season and trade has dropped off badly. However, the first two weeks are always the worst and in a few days we will probably forget all about Lent.

The weather has been cold, with a few snow storms, but there has been sunshine most of the last two weeks and as a result stock is coming in quite plentifully. Daffodils and Trumpet Major narcissi, which were so much in demand, will not now tempt buyers at $1 per hundred. Sweet peas and violets are almost as bad, bright weather bringing in great quantities of them, and prices have dropped; job lots are to be had at any time. Carnations are plentiful for the first time this winter. Roses still hold their own and are the only things which continue to bring good prices, but the stock is fine what there is of it.

The retail shops are complaining about things being dull, but that is caused by the change from working day and night to doing an ordinary day's business. They are taking advantage of the cheaper flowers and the windows are beautiful.

Various Notes.

Miss E. B. Maxwell, of Wilkinsburg, had a bad scare February 23. The building next her store was burned out and it was expected her store would go with it. Miss Emma, however, held the fort with her ledger under one arm and the cash-box under the other, but fortunately she escaped much damage.

Ed McCollum, of the Pittsburg Florists' Exchange, has been unfortunate of late, falling several weeks ago and disabling one arm, and last week was laid up with the grip.

Mrs. W. L. Trumpore, wife of W. L. Trumpore, of J. H. Small & Sons, New York, has been here attending the funeral of her mother, who was buried Sunday, February 24.

The Pittsburg Cut Flower Co. is receiving some fine Maids, Brides and Richmonds from Bakerstown.

A. M. Murdoch, who has been away from his place of business for the last five weeks on account of illness, is again at his post. Hoo-Hoo.

Bloomington, Ill.—A fire at 3 a. m. February 22 destroyed the greenhouse of James Adams, on South Linden street. Some of the plants were saved. The loss is about $1,000.

FINEST OF YOUNG STOCK

Selected from the strong, healthy, young plants we shall use in replanting our own houses; propagated from prize-winning stock. All plants guaranteed.

WICHITA, KAN.

It's a long time since any remarks emanating from this immediate neighborhood have appeared in the REVIEW. As we are still doing things, a few words may be appreciated by some of the readers.

Christmas is now but a dream, but to us in Wichita a very pleasant dream, as business was far in advance of the previous year and the beautiful weather at that time made business a real pleasure. Since that time trade has been brisk and stock particularly scarce, but of good quality in spite of the long spells of cloudy weather, which sunny Kansas neither appreciates nor is accustomed to. Of course now our thoughts are all on Easter and whether this, that and the other is going to be just right or wrong is causing the careful grower many a bad quarter of an hour.

A visit to one of the larger places found the stock in good shape. Easter lilies were promising, both in excellence and in numbers. Hydrangeas, Ramblers and other things which are used so much as Easter offerings were all in fine condition and the place had a neat and prosperous appearance.

It is reported that C. P. Mueller will soon vacate his present quarters and move two doors south into a more commodious building with an imposing front and a large, admirable show window. May the report prove true, as Wichita is really entitled to a more up-to-date flower shop than it at present possesses.

Another greenhouse is in course of construction, but not having seen it can say nothing as to its dimensions or the use to which it is to be put. Later on we will say more on this subject.

Few roses are grown here, the great central market of Chicago being relied on for most of the supply, with Pleasant Hill, Mo., a close second. Since it has been proved that good roses can be successfully grown, no doubt the area devoted to this important flower will be increased. Importing roses from outside points at $10 and $12 per hundred, be the stock ever so good, is not very profitable to Wichita retailers, as the community considers anything over $2 as highway robbery, $3 causes spasms and a nervous clutching at the pocket book, and any one having the temerity to ask $4 would probably furnish business for the undertaker. However, we are all getting along fine and enjoying life.

GRAND RAPIDS.

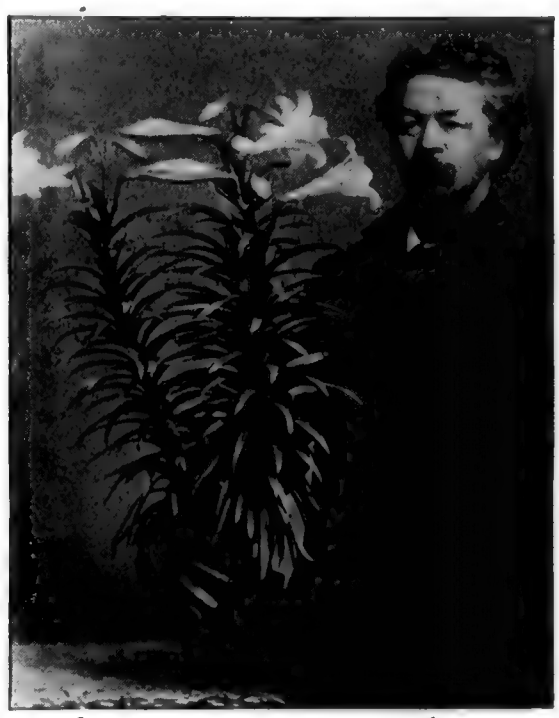
The Market.

The sun still continues to play hide and seek among the clouds, but we are all thankful for what little sunshine we do get, as it has noticeably increased our cuts. The market is still active and as yet has not felt the coming of Lent. All the stores report a large increase of business on St. Valentine's day over that of a year ago. Stock is still scarce, and roses and white carnations are still at the famine point. The coming of large supplies of bulbous stock has helped out a great deal, but does not seem to have affected the steady demand for carnations and roses. Harrisii are more plentiful now, but are being used up fast and callas are moving along nicely. The outlook for Easter is good and all report a prospect of fine lily crops.

Club Meeting.

The Florists' Club met February 18 and had a record-breaking attendance of twenty-six. The evening was for the most part given over to the vegetable growers, who made the most of it, with talks about the growing of cucumbers, lettuce, etc. Mr. Strong gave an interesting talk about sub-irrigation, as experimented with on his place, by the State Agricultural College. The club decided to give an exhibition the third Monday in April, and a committee was appointed to look after the details. It will consist of bedding stock and cut blooms, also exhibits of vegetables. S. S. Skidelsky was present and gave an interesting talk and several pointers, which if followed will help the local club to success. Dues were collected and came in so fast that they nearly swamped our honorable treasurer, Mr. Stover.

G. F. Crabb is now able to sit up in bed and hopes soon to be around again.



H. F. C.

Growers Form Corporation.

The Grand Rapids Herald of February 21 says: "Believing that their business can be better conducted under a sort of coöperative plan, several prominent greenhouse men of this city met last evening and formed a stock company to conduct their business, and also make an extension in the shape of a large central greenhouse. The meeting was held in the office of William B. Brown and the new company was organized with a capital of $160,000, of which $90,000 is paid in. It will be known as the Grand Rapids Greenhouse Co. The idea is not to discard the present plants owned by the different members of the company, but to operate them all under the central management and in addition to build a large central greenhouse on some railroad where shipping facilities will be of the best. This central plant will be built as soon as a suitable location can be found. Officers were elected as follows: President, F. M. Strong; secretary, Frank J. Cook; treasurer, Edward Taylor; manager, S. J. Perry. The members expect the enterprise will pay from ten to twelve per cent on the investment. Stock will be placed on the market at once."

Wilmette, Ill.—William Foith has about 36,000 feet of glass planted to carnations. He is planning to build a small extension this coming season, as he wants to grow chrysanthemums also.

PREPARE FOR EASTER

An Immense Stock of Choice

EASTER PLANTS

Blooming Easter Week

or earlier if desired, are now ready for immediate shipment.

Come or mail your order direct to the headquarters. Our reputation over the entire country from the Atlantic to the Pacific in growing Easter stock for the wholesale market for many years past ought to be sufficient guarantee as to the truth of what we say and advertise. We have every house, nook and corner full of plants and they were never so fine as this year, 1907.

While laborers, merchants, jobbers, contractors, builders, etc., have increased their prices almost double as usual, we have not advanced our prices; but look, we sell our plants at the same old prices charged two or three years ago when the cost of producing plants was much cheaper.

What was my duty on my trip to Ghent, Belgium (the land of azaleas, araucarias and palms), last fall, 1906? Answer: Of course, the interests of my customers, not speaking of the 1100 souvenir cards which I mailed to my customers in America. For the benefit of my customers I also bought Azalea Indica for Easter trade, the cream of Belgium's production that money could buy.

AZALEAS

Now I am able to offer to my customers, and the trade in general, two houses full of Mme. Vander Cruyssen azaleas, the well known and much favored best double pink azalea that has given so much satisfaction all over America. Plants as round as an apple, just covered with buds, 6 to 7-in. pots, at 60c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 and $2.00 each. Other fine varieties adapted for American markets, such as Niobe, Benard, Andre Alba, Deutsche Perle (double white), Prof. Wolters, Empress of India, Vervæneana (double variegated), and about eight more fine sorts, all covered with buds, 6 to 7-in. pots, 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 and $2.00 each; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 50c to 60c. We have a fine limited quantity of azaleas, 50c to 60c each, such as Apollo (double dark scarlet), Deutsche Perle, Simon Mardner, and a few others.

Hydrangea Otaksa (pink), 6 to 7-in. pots, 40c, 50c, 75c to $1.00 each; also $1.25 and $1.50 each.

Lilium Multiflorum and Japanese Longiflorum were never so fine as this year, all sizes, and can meet all wants, 6-in. pots, 5 to 8 buds to a plant, 10c per bud 4 buds and under, 12c per bud. Raised from Henry F. Michell Co.'s special brand bulbs.

Spiraea Gladstone, 6 to 7-in. pots, these plants are very large and bushy and unusually fine, full of buds, at 50c, 75c and $1.00 each.

Crimson Rambler Roses, 3 feet high and over, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50, $1.75 to $2.00 each.

In Philadelphia there's a florist noted,
Aschmann, his name, his plants beyond compare;
To a sweet girl his heart is all devoted,
Next rank his Araucarias, passing fair;
When seen together they're a pair so charming—
Brimful of beauty—both he cannot keep;
So to his heart he'll hold his winsome darling,
While you may have the Araucarias cheap.

Araucaria Compacta Robusta, five years old, 7-in. pots, 25 to 30 inches high, 4 to 5 tiers, width the same as height, very swell stuff, $1.75, $2.00 to $2.50 each.

Araucaria Excelsa Glauca, 4 years old, 4 tiers, 20 inches high, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50 each. Specimen Glauca, 7-in. pots, 5 years old, 5 tiers, 30 to 35 inches high, $3.00 each.

Araucaria Excelsa, 4 years old, 6-in. pots, 20 to 25 inches high, 5, 6 to 7 tiers, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 each.

Kentia Forsteriana, 7-in. pots, made-up, one large plant in center, 3 small around, $1.50 to $1.75 each. Single plants, 36, 45 to 50 inches high, $1.00, $1.25 to $1.50 each.

Cineraria Hybrida, have a house full all shades, 5, 5½ to 6-in. pots, $2.50, $3.00, $4.00 to $5.00 per doz.

Begonia, new improved Erfordii, an immense bloomer, blooming the entire summer and winter, 5¼-in. pots, $3.00 per doz.; 4-in. pots, $1.80 per doz.

Primula Obconica, 5¼-in. pots, $2.50 per doz.; 4-in. pots, $1.80 per doz.

White Daisies (Queen Alexandra and Marguerites) 5¼ to 5½-in. pots, $2.50 per doz.

Areca Sapida (palms), 6-in. pots, 50c each.

Dracaena Bruanti, 6-in. pots, 50c each.

Ferns, Nephrolepis Barrowsii, 6-in., pots, 50c to 75c each; 7-in. pots, $1.00.

Scottii, 8-in. pots, very large, $1.50 each; 5-in pots, 35c each; 5½ to 6-in. pots, 50c.

Boston Ferns, 7-in. pots, 75c; 6-in. pots, 40c to 50c each; 5-in. pots, 25c to 30c each.

Holly Ferns, 8-in. pots, $1.20 per doz.

Hyacinths, raised from first-class bulbs of my own importation. These bulbs cannot be compared with ordinary stuff flooding the market. King of the Blues, Lavender (blue), Gertrude (best pink), La Grandesse (white), 4-in. pots, $12.00 per 100.

Tournesol Tulips, red and yellow variegated, the best selling Tulips on the market. Will stay in bloom 10 days. 3 bulbs planted in a 4-in. pot, $12.00 per 100 or $1.50 per doz.

Double Von Sion Daffodils, the best double yellow narcissus in the world, will sell on sight. 3 double-nosed bulbs planted in 5, 5½ and 6-in. pots, $2.50 to $3.00 per doz. pots. All bulbs are strictly first-class, of my own importation and are now outside in coldframe and will bloom in about two weeks after bringing in greenhouse,

Have about 200 pots Von Sion Daffodils, 5¼-in. pots, 3 plants in a pot, in greenhouse now, in bud ready to open for immediate sale at $2.00 per doz. This is a special offer, only good for a few weeks.

Moonvines, Ipomaea Noctiflora (A. W. Smith, originator), best pure white, largest and most fragrant moonvine in the world. I made a specialty of them for the past 15 years and am known as the Moonvine Grower of America and grow yearly about 20,000. In 2½-in. pots, $5.00 per 100. Now ready.

Directions to visit my place: Take Germantown or Willow Grove car at 13th and Market Sts. to Ontario St., or 8th and Market St., and take Germantown, Chestnut Hill or Willow Grove car to Ontario St. In going either route you walk two squares east on Ontario St.

Mention if pots are wanted with all plants. Cash with order, please.

All goods must travel on purchaser's risk.

Latrobe, Pa., Feb. 18, 1907.

Mr. Godfrey Aschmann.

Dear Sir—I received your plants in good condition, satisfactory to me. I am pleased in every way. Respectfully,

Edw. Leizmann.

(Above order amounted to $86.25, for 55 azaleas, 19 kentias and araucarias and ferns.)

Philadelphia, Feb. 25.

I have seen Mr. Aschmann's Easter stock and I can truthfully say that it never looked finer, and he never before had such a large stock. Am pleased to recommend our customers to Mr. Aschmann. F. J. Michell, of the firm of H. F. Michell Co.

Chrysanthemum

By Arthur Herrington

Formerly president Chrysanthemum Society of America.

The most complete and comprehensive work on the cultivation of the chrysanthemum that has yet been published in America. Its scope and character may be gleaned from the list of contents, which comprises chapters on composts; planting; benches, boxes or pots; general cultural details; crown and terminal buds; feeding, its object and application; care of the buds; exhibition and judging; specimen plants, plants in pots; raising from seed and hybridizing; sports; hardy chrysanthemums; chrysanthemums for south and west; insect pests and diseases; classification and selection of varieties for special purposes; history of the chrysanthemum, etc. The book will be welcomed for the lucid, comprehensive, as well as the practical character of its contents. Handsomely illustrated. 168 pages, 5x7 inches. Price 50c postpaid.

GREAT BEND, KAN.

The new greenhouses being built by Stoke & Stoke are centrally located and just what has been needed in this vicinity for some time. Will E. Stoke recently sold his newspaper plant, which he had conducted for the last twenty years, so that he could devote his time to the florists' business, which his wife, Ella M. Stoke, had built up until it required more than one to look after it. The two houses will be 20 by 80, up to date in every particular, heated by a hot water plant, with capacity for enlarging as trade demands. Mr. and Mrs. Stoke, having lived in Great Bend and having been in business for so many years, are well and favorably known and have fine prospects for a lucrative business.

3 NEW CANNAS

WILLIAM SAUNDERS

The flowers are large, of splendid form, and are borne very freely in immense clusters. The color is a deep rich shining scarlet slightly dappled with crimson. Foliage is a rich bronze. Height, 3½ to 4 feet. We believe that Wm. Saunders is decidedly the most perfect Canna of this type that has been introduced. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

OTTAWA

Is a strong grower, very robust and 5 to 6 feet high. The flowers are large and beautifully formed, color is carmine with tints of old rose and deep coral, add to this the silken sheen and you can imagine the effect a few plants will produce.

NOTE—We had this Canna on trial among the Canadian experimental stations last summer and this is the official report of their expert: "Quite distinct and one of the most beautiful shades of color I ever saw in Cannas. Of 70 massed in one bed during the past season, this was the most floriferous in the collection, coming into bloom early and continuing until cut down by frost, as many as 13 expanded heads of blooms being counted at one time on a plant, and not a poor one among them, all being of immense size." 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

NEW YORK

Has the Orchid type of flower. They have much more substance than the flowers of the other varieties of this class, and will stand the hot sunshine as well as the toughest varieties of cannas. The color is a solid rich scarlet covered with a beautiful glowing sheen. The flowers are large and contrast beautifully with the dark bronze foliage. 50c each; $5.00 per doz.; $35.00 per 100.

Send for our list and prices of 60 other leading varieties of Cannas.

ROSES, are our great specialty. 2¼ and 4-inch pot plants we have in great variety — Philadelphia Rambler, Crimson Rambler, Dorothy Perkins and other climbers in strong field plants.

SHRUBBERY, in variety. Viburnum Plicatum, Spiraeas, Althaeas, Honeysuckles, etc.

HARTFORD, CONN.

At J. J. Goodwin's, J. F. Huss, grower, is to be seen the largest collection of hardy ferns in this country and I question if it is exceeded in Europe, as Mr. Huss believes he has every variety in existence. More than 300 varieties are growing outdoors, in addition to 100 indoors. They form a most interesting study, the types of Scolopendrium vulgare and crispum being possibly the most numerous and variform. Among the exotic varieties Gymnogramme chrysophylla superba, with its beautiful, heavily crested fronds, is the choicest of the golden species. Cheiranthus elegans is appropriately termed the lace fern. Pellæa flexuosa is a pretty Mexican variety, producing fronds four feet and more in length. It makes a fine plant for hanging baskets.

Mr. Huss was tenderly pricking off the mites of seedlings at the time of my visit and grew reminiscent, going back to the time when we were delving together in the soil at Hugh Low & Co.'s, of London, when at the same time Fred L. Atkins, of Rutherford, had his first experience with Vanda cærulea and Julius A. Peterson, of Cincinnati, with Pandanus Veitchii. Mr. Huss is an ardent lover of hardy stock and at the same time a splendid plantsman, and believes there is good money for the person who makes a specialty of hardy ferns, or adds this line to an existing line of hardy plants.

The shelves of these houses are filled with more than 400 kinds of hardy herbaceous plants, all labeled, forming a miniature botanical garden, all to be planted outdoors during the month of July. In May the show of the hardy polyanthus alone is worth a visit, the assortment and number being immense.

John Coombs says he will recommend the dealer who will supply the true type of Lilium multiflorum to a place in the hall of fame. He does not believe in putting all his eggs into one basket, but says they hatch out the same kind of chicks anyhow.

J. Vidbourne & Co. predict a big planting season, judging from orders booked and inquiries received for nursery stock. W. M.

Scranton, Pa.—W. H. Davis recently took a big sled-load of friends to Elmhurst for a chicken supper.

Painesville, O.—Carl Hagenburger recently had his eyebrows and mustache badly singed by the exploding of gas in his furnace.

CACTUS GERANIUMS

A very unique and strikingly beautiful distinct type which, originating in England but a few years ago, at once won a place in great popular favor as a pot plant, for the conservatory and window boxes, for which they are unusually pleasing and attractive, on account of their remarkably handsome and thrifty but dwarf growth, small foliage, and marvelous profusion of bloom.

The Cactus has by common consent been recognized as a distinctive term applied to certain type of Dahlias, Cinerarias, etc., but none deserve the appellation more so than the Cactus Geranium, with its admirable elegance of form, exquisite, graceful, narrow petals, similar to those of the Cactus Dahlia.

We offer a collection of four varieties, and to introduce them into every collection, we will for a short time send one dozen by mail postpaid for $1.50.

PELARGONIUM PELTATO ZONAL

Alliance, (Lemoine 1905)

An exquisitely beautiful novelty of the highest order. A hybrid between an Ivy and a Zonal, and which has retained all the good points of both parents, including the beautiful soft finish of the Ivy and the hardy constitution of the Zonal.

It is therefore, not an ordinary variety but an extraordinary variety in all the good points that go to make up an attractive Geranium. Its color is the most exquisite shade of delicate lilac white, upper petals feathered and blotched beautiful bright crimson rose. Flowers semi-double, abundantly produced in fine large trusses on long stems.

Habit is excellent, robust, strong, close jointed; for vases or as a pot plant it is unequalled.

25c each; $2.50 per doz.; to introduce we will send postpaid for a short time.

Caesar Franck, (Lemoine 1905)

This is unquestionably destined to become the most popular Ivy Geranium yet introduced; the color is the most magnificent shade of soft crimson, with an exquisite shading of tender rose at the base of the petals. The flowers are about as double as the Crimson Rambler Rose, which they resemble, only much richer in color and finish, produced on long stems in enormous trusses. Habit, vigorous, quick growing and pleasing with a strong constitution. For baskets and vases it is all that could be desired.

Considering its general good behavior, being in keeping with its other good points, we are convinced that it is a most desirable sort.

The Market.

Business continues good for Lent. While there is nothing rushing, still there is enough to keep every one busy and more can not be expected now. Funeral work furnishes the main item of business. For that reason the demand for the shorter roses has been the best and they have really sold for higher prices in proportion than the long-stemmed ones. In fact, all kinds of flowers that could be used in funeral work sold the best and the market quickly cleaned out of that kind of goods. The prices on all grades of flowers have held up wonderfully well and it would look as if they would stay up all during Lent. Both roses and carnations are in heavier supply, owing to the fine weather we have been having, but bulbous stock is coming in even larger quantities and there is just about all of this kind of stock that can be sold to advantage. The bright sunshine has been bringing it along pretty fast. Green goods of all kinds are getting scarce. Ferns are especially so and it is hard to get enough to take care of the orders. Leucothœ sprays and galax have been selling first-class and boxwood is beginning to be a feature in this market.

With Easter but a little over four weeks away it is time to look about and see what we are going to have for that day, which is the very best in the whole year for the florist. In bulbous flowers this market will be well supplied and the stock will be fine this year. Owing to the earliness of Easter many growers will fail to get their lilies ready in time and there can scarcely be a question that there will be too many of these flowers. If there is not a decided shortage I shall be greatly surprised. So I should advise the early placing of orders if you want to get anywhere near what you will need. Roses and carnations will be about as usual; that is, they will be scarce. The present beautiful weather we are having, if it holds, will work wonders though, and there may be enough of these flowers to enable us to fill all orders reasonably well.

Various Notes.

Dan Ruttle has purchased a tract of land at Rosedale, Ky., and intends to begin the erection of three greenhouses early in the spring. He intends to devote his glass to the growing of carnations and green goods.

Thursday evening, February 28, Chas. Dieterich and Miss Olivia Johnson, of Latonia, Ky., were married. Mr. Dieterich is a member of the firm of C. P. Dieterich & Bro., of Maysville, Ky. The couple left immediately for a wedding trip through the south.

Ernst Mack has been on the sick list, suffering from a severe cold.

Joe Hill and Fred Lemon, of Richmond, Ind., were visitors last Saturday. They were especially interested in what R. Witterstaetter has to show in the way of new carnations. I might say

The Greenhouse Structural Co. is ready for business at 840 West Fourth street. The president of the company is George W. Loeber, and the secretary W. J. Foster. Both were with the greenhouse department of the Lockland Lumber Co., Mr. Loeber having had full charge of that department for some five years. They will manufacture all sorts of greenhouse structural material, but will make a specialty of iron-frame greenhouses, reinforcing for concrete post and board walls, ventilating machinery, iron fittings, etc. Mr. Loeber is on a friendly footing with every greenhouse owner in the territory tributary to the Cincinnati market and is not unknown to the general trade in the central west, so that the firm should be in a position to do a good business from the outset.

DOBBS FERRY, N. Y.

The regular meeting of the Dobbs Ferry Horticultural Association was held in its room in Odd Fellows' hall February 23, R. Boreham in the chair. There was a prize for the best display of cut flowers, which was awarded to J. Bradley, gardener to H. Sidenberg, Hastings-on-Hudson; C. Wilson second. H. Kastberg, gardener to Miss Masters, also staged a fine collection and was awarded a cultural certificate for some fine seedling amaryllises. H. Kieling was also awarded a cultural certificate for some of the finest roses it has been our pleasure to see. James Scott, of Tarrytown, S. Bradley, of Dobbs Ferry, and W. Preston, of Hastings, were the judges.

J. Bradley read a paper on "The Culture of Cyclamen," which was well received and he was given a hearty vote of thanks. James Scott told of the different methods in the treatment of cyclamen which he had seen in his travels. Mr. Bradley staged some blooms of a double cyclamen which were highly thought of by the members.

The exhibits for the next meeting are to be of foliage plants in no more than 8-inch pots.

Greenhouse Heating.

BOILER CAPACITY.

I have a common round boiler, 3x7 feet, with thirty 3-inch flues. The boiler is now used for hot water and is set in brick, all except a steam dome which projects from the top. It is claimed to be a twenty horse-power boiler. How many square feet of glass will the boiler carry to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees when it is 10 degrees below zero outdoors? I use 1½-inch and 2-inch pipe. At present I am heating only one house, 21x60, but I intend to heat three more short-span houses, each 10x70, connected to the first house on the north; walls to be six feet high and no partitions between any of the houses. Will this be the limit of my boiler capacity, or can I heat a 7-room dwelling in addition? The dwelling stands about sixty-five feet from the boiler.

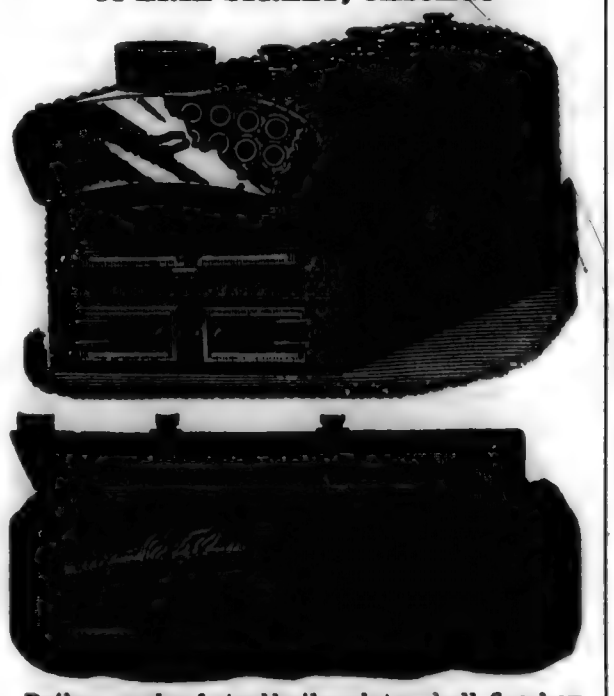
E. A. M.

The houses in question, to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees, will require a little less than 1,200 square feet of radiation, and, although your boiler is not more than fifteen horse-power, it should have a capacity of about 1,900 square feet of radiation, which is about 700 square feet more than demanded by the greenhouses. If the pipes to and from the dwelling are carefully protected I think the boiler will carry both the dwelling and greenhouses, but it will be working under a full load in cold weather.

L. C. C.

HEATING TWO HOUSES.

I have built a new greenhouse at the east end of my old one. It is 21x50 and twelve feet to the ridge, with three feet of glass in the side walls. The old house is 26x77 and eight feet to the ridge. The boiler-room, 14x20, is in the southeast corner of the old house. Will my No. 1 Kroeschell hot water boiler be large enough to heat the plant? How many flows and returns and what size will I need to heat to 60 degrees in Wisconsin climate? I would also like to know how much concrete to put around the posts of the new house to keep it from spreading, posts to be three feet in the ground.



J. R.

The boiler you have should be ample to heat the plant in question. The new house can be heated by using 2-inch pipe arranged in coils, five pipes in each coil, fifteen in all, the length of the house. One pipe in each coil should be a riser, carried if possible direct from the boiler to the coil. If this cannot be arranged, then a 3-inch pipe should be carried from the boiler to the end of the new house and there divide to feed the three 2-inch flows for the three coils.

The character of the soil will have more to do with the amount of concrete to use about the posts than any other single factor. If the soil is dry and resistant, holes eighteen inches across should be large enough; but if the soil is soft and yielding at any season it is doubtful if you can insure the house in this way. At any rate I should support the structure so as to take as much thrust off the side wall as possible. This can be done by posts under the ridge and braces on the purlins, or by truss rods between the purlins.

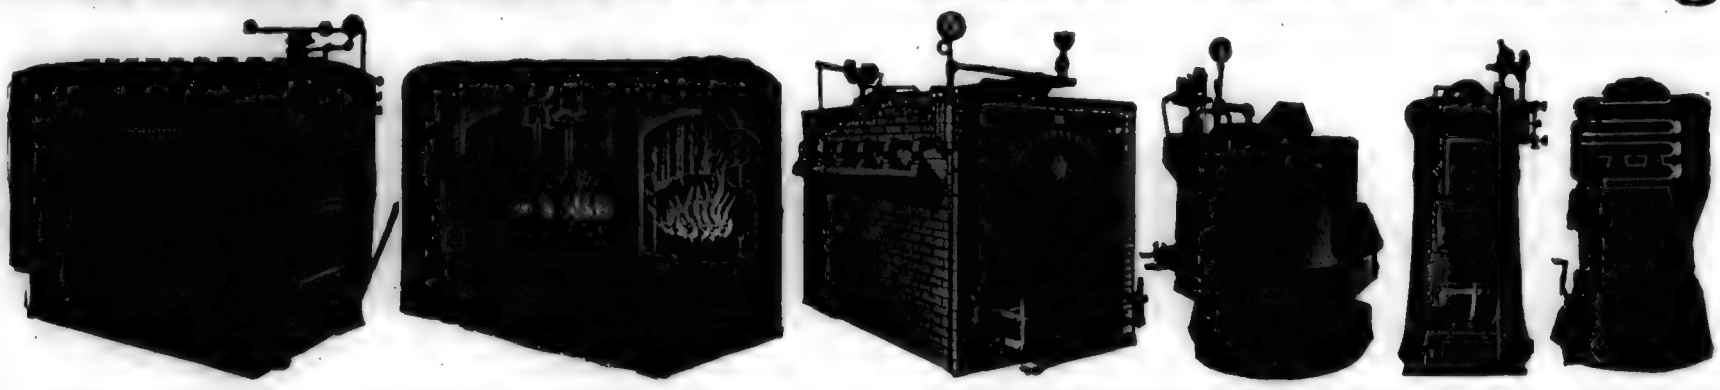
TO HEAT FOUR GREENHOUSE.

I am about to build two even-span north and south houses, connected, each 24x50, also two even-span east and west houses, connected, each 26x200 or 26x250, with extension in view. The last two are to be used for cut flowers.

I have on hand 5,000 feet of 1½-inch pipe, 1,300 feet of 3-inch, 1,000 feet of 2½-inch, 200 feet of 6-inch and 1,000 feet of 1-inch. I also have a quantity of steam radiators for my dwelling. I want to use steam. I don't want to use overhead mains. Should I use hot water and steam and what size of boiler? I can go as deep as I like with my boiler-pit. Where should I locate the boiler? The temperature outdoors, here in Manitoba, sometimes reaches 50 degrees below zero. When the sun goes down, in the winter, it gets cold very quickly; that is why I would prefer steam.



F. M.

The 6-inch pipe will be too large for the steam plant so far discussed, but as soon as you get 30,000 square feet of glass the 6-inch pipe will come in play. By using the 1½-inch, 2½-inch and 3-inch pipe you can arrange a combination steam and hot water plant which will work with satisfaction. If you decide to use this system, I should advise locating the boiler-pit so as to divide the houses so that no run will be more than 100 feet from the boiler, if possible. If steam alone is used this will not be of so great importance, but with hot water in a cold country hold the length of the flow pipes within 100 feet, if possible. A single brick-set forty horse-power tubular boiler will care for the houses mentioned. L. C. C.

AMOUNT OF RADIATION.

I have three east and west, three-quarter-span greenhouses to be heated with hot water. Each house is 22x200 with walls five feet high. The north bar is eighteen feet and the south bar nine feet. Two houses are for carnations and one is for roses. What kind of boiler do I need to maintain a temperature of 60 degrees in the rose house and 52 degrees in the carnation houses where zero is the coldest weather? I use wood for fuel. How many feet of radiation will each house require? How many feet of pipe should I use and what size for overhead and under benches, also size of the main? The boiler will be set up at the northwest corner of the north house and on a level with the houses. G. B.

Your plant with boiler set as suggested can be heated by steam more easily than in any other way; but with wood for fuel hot water heating would be preferable if the boiler can be located so as to reduce the length of the flow pipes to practically 100 feet, which is about the maximum length for hot water on a gravity system. Whatever the type of the boiler used, it should have capacity to heat 5,500 square feet of radiation. If a horizontal tubular boiler is selected, one rated at sixty horse-power will be about right. If you locate the boiler on the surface and at the point mentioned it will be necessary to use a circulating pump for hot water, and a pump to return the water of condensation back to the boiler if steam is used.

Each house requires about 1,650 square feet of radiation, which can be supplied by 1,400 lineal feet of 4-inch pipe; 1,650 lineal feet of 3-inch pipe; 2,640 feet of 2-inch pipe or 3,795 feet of 1¼-inch pipe. If you use steam each house should have two 3-inch flow pipes and eighteen 1¼-inch returns. L. C. C.

ELEVATION OF EXPANSION TANK.

Which is the better way to feed a hot water boiler, direct into the boiler or into a return near the boiler? Would it be a good plan to connect the 2-inch feed pipe to a water tank twenty-one feet above the boiler, the tank six feet high and ten feet in diameter? The 4-inch heating pipes are connected by cement joints. What is the proper height to place the tank above the boiler and what size should it be. W. W. T. & S.

I doubt if the cement joints of the cast-iron pipe will bear the pressure from a tank elevated twenty-one feet. If they will, this will greatly increase the efficiency of your system. The feed pipe, connected preferably to the main return near the boiler, need be no more than ¾-inch to care for the expansion of a system of good size. The expansion tank should be large enough to hold all the water driven out of the system by heating it. A 50-gallon tank is sufficient for a boiler suitable for heating two houses 20x100. If wrought-iron pipe with screw joints is used the tank can be elevated fifteen to twenty feet, but with cast-iron pipe and cement joints the tank must usually be kept below ten feet. L. C. C.

Greenhouse Heating.

BOILER CAPACITY.

I have a common round boiler, 3x7 feet, with thirty 3-inch flues. The boiler is now used for hot water and is set in brick, all except a steam dome which projects from the top. It is claimed to be a twenty horse-power boiler. How many square feet of glass will the boiler carry to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees when it is 10 degrees below zero outdoors? I use 1½-inch and 2-inch pipe. At present I am heating only one house, 21x60, but I intend to heat three more short-span houses, each 10x70, connected to the first house on the north; walls to be six feet high and no partitions between any of the houses. Will this be the limit of my boiler capacity, or can I heat a 7-room dwelling in addition? The dwelling stands about sixty-five feet from the boiler.

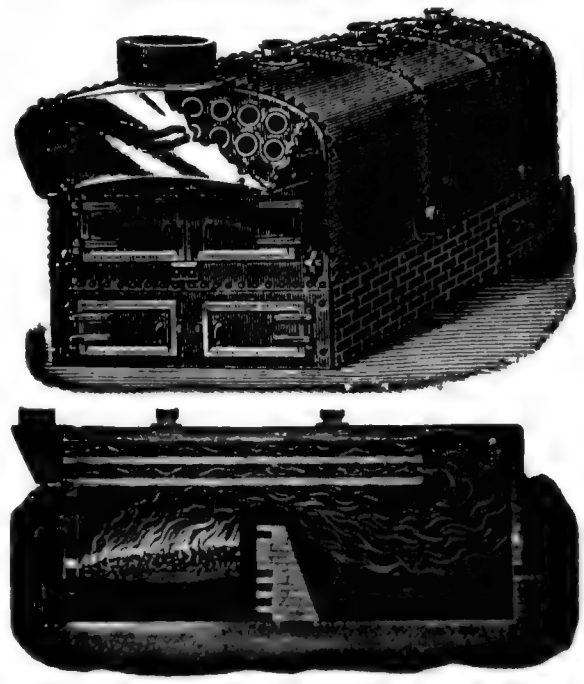
E. A. M.

The houses in question, to maintain a temperature of 55 degrees, will require a little less than 1,200 square feet of radiation, and, although your boiler is not more than fifteen horse-power, it should have a capacity of about 1,900 square feet of radiation, which is about 700 square feet more than demanded by the greenhouses. If the pipes to and from the dwelling are carefully protected I think the boiler will carry both the dwelling and greenhouses, but it will be working under a full load in cold weather.

L. C. C.

HEATING TWO HOUSES.

I have built a new greenhouse at the east end of my old one. It is 21x50 and twelve feet to the ridge, with three feet of glass in the side walls. The old house is 26x77 and eight feet to the ridge. The boiler-room, 14x20, is in the southeast corner of the old house. Will my No. 1 Kroeschell hot water boiler be large enough to heat the plant? How many flows and returns and what size will I need to heat to 60 degrees in Wisconsin climate? I would also like to know how much concrete to put around the posts of the new house to keep it from spreading, posts to be three feet in the ground.



J. R.

The boiler you have should be ample to heat the plant in question. The new house can be heated by using 2-inch pipe arranged in coils, five pipes in each coil, fifteen in all, the length of the house. One pipe in each coil should be a riser, carried if possible direct from the boiler to the coil. If this cannot be arranged, then a 3-inch pipe should be carried from the boiler to the end of the new house and there divide to feed the three 2-inch flows for the three coils.

The character of the soil will have more to do with the amount of concrete to use about the posts than any other single factor. If the soil is dry and resistant, holes eighteen inches across should be large enough; but if the soil is soft and yielding at any season it is doubtful if you can insure the house in this way. At any rate I should support the structure so as to take as much thrust off the side wall as possible. This can be done by posts under the ridge and braces on the purlins, or by truss rods between the purlins.

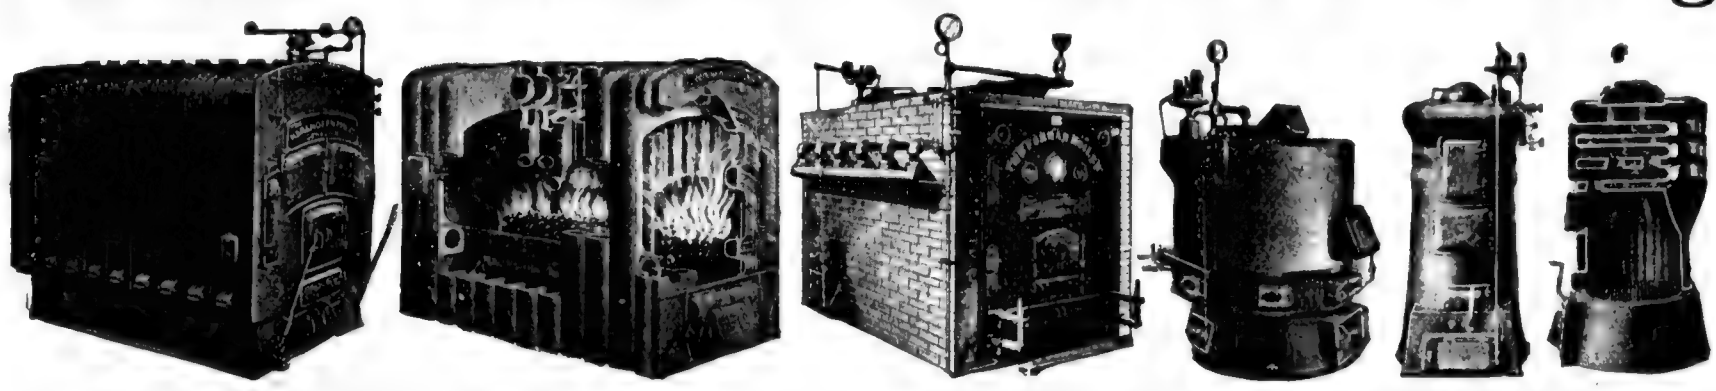
TO HEAT FOUR GREENHOUSE.

I am about to build two even-span north and south houses, connected, each 24x50, also two even-span east and west houses, connected, each 26x200 or 26x250, with extension in view. The last two are to be used for cut flowers.

I have on hand 5,000 feet of 1½-inch pipe, 1,300 feet of 3-inch, 1,000 feet of 2½-inch, 200 feet of 6-inch and 1,000 feet of 1-inch. I also have a quantity of steam radiators for my dwelling. I want to use steam. I don't want to use overhead mains. Should I use hot water and steam and what size of boiler? I can go as deep as I like with my boiler-pit. Where should I locate the boiler? The temperature outdoors, here in Manitoba, sometimes reaches 50 degrees below zero. When the sun goes down, in the winter, it gets cold very quickly; that is why I would prefer steam.



F. M.

The 6-inch pipe will be too large for the steam plant so far discussed, but as soon as you get 30,000 square feet of glass the 6-inch pipe will come in play. By using the 1½-inch, 2½-inch and 3-inch pipe you can arrange a combination steam and hot water plant which will work with satisfaction. If you decide to use this system, I should advise locating the boiler-pit so as to divide the houses so that no run will be more than 100 feet from the boiler, if possible. If steam alone is used this will not be of

DETROIT.

The Market.

Despite the fact that business is good, much stock keeps piling up at the wholesale houses. Roses are arriving in a little larger quantities, but hardly enough to equal the large demand, caused mostly by the better class of funeral work. The price on roses has taken a slight drop, more especially in the shorter grades. Beauties are seldom seen on this market.

Aside from white carnations, which are not equal to the steady demand, this favorite flower is a glut. Enchantress is especially overplentiful. That there is an overabundance of bulbous stock grown in the locality is apparent. There is a large demand for hyacinths, tulips, daffodils, narcissi, etc., but the store men grow so many it is no wonder that thousands of blooms go to waste at the commission houses.

The local houses are experiencing the same trouble with common ferns as the commission men in many other cities. They are poor and becoming scarce. Smilax is also quite scarce.

Various Notes.

All business cares were put aside by members of the Detroit Florists' Club Wednesday evening, February 20, it being the night of the annual entertainment and dancing party. A quartet and Master Lewis, of Pontiac, provided the musical numbers on the program. Fully two-thirds of the one hundred florists and their friends enjoyed themselves dancing, while the other third spent the evening playing cards. The inner man was well taken care of by a large punch bowl and a light lunch. William Brown and his assistants should be given a life position on the entertainment committee.

The funeral of the late Wm. C. McMillan called for many beautiful floral offerings, mostly elaborate wreaths. Breitmeyer's and Schroeter's had the cream of the orders.

Messrs. Dykes and Fancourt enjoyed themselves immensely the evening of the Detroit Florists' Club entertainment.

A vase of pure white Enchantress, shown by Thomas Browne at Harmonie hall the night of the Florists' party, caused much favorable comment.

We Have Said a Good Deal

in our advs. about pleasant dealings, and there's a good deal to be said about it—it's just the difference between having to push and crowd to get your house shipped in time and having it shipped on time. The difference between disagreeable contentions over no-account things and our big way of adjusting the little things. The difference between making the doing of business a part of the fun of life or a part of its irritating care.

We believe in pleasant dealing. Write us.

Not only should a greenhouse look light, but it must be light; fresh white paint and sunshiny days are deceiving. U-Bar greenhouses are the best greenhouses built because they do not depend on paint and sunshine—they are the lightest houses built, have less shading members—wider glass spacings. Send for catalog. Pierson U-Bar Company, Designers and Builders of U-Bar Greenhouses, Metropolitan Building, 4th Avenue and 23rd Street, New York.

Down in Texas

we furnished some greenhouse material to a florist named Kezer. He wrote us as follows: "Enclosed find draft to pay for the enclosed bill. The material you furnished for my new house was very satisfactory—I like it in preference to any other." Mr. H. A. Kezer is one of the most prominent florists of El Paso, Tex. We have the original letter and can prove Mr. Kezer's statements.

The base bolted up and the ridge and truss grates in position ready for setting on the sections.

Three sections in place. You can see that our separate tie bolts for each section and push nipples make the set-up an easy and sure proposition.

HOW TO SET IT UP.

With each boiler we furnish printed instructions which tell you the quickest and easiest way to set the boiler up. The only tools necessary are a monkey wrench and a screw driver—nothing complicated, no need for high priced, skilled labor as any of your handy men can do it. When your order is received at the factory, a boiler is at once completely set up on the shipping room floor, every part set in place just as it is to be in your cellar. It is then tested to a high water pressure—any hitches in going together, any missing parts are found. Each section is then numbered for its right position. When you get the boiler, everything will be there, every part goes together without the least trouble. The sections are easy to handle and can be taken down narrow stairs or through small doors. You have no ash pits to build of brick; no expensive bricking-in as is the case with so many boilers that at first thought seem cheaper, but when you figure extra cost and bother of setting them, the "Burnham" is by far the cheapest in the end. With the "Burnham," it's simply a case of bolting the base together and placing it where you want the boiler to stand; then drop in the grates and set on back section; put nipples in place, set on another section and draw up tight with each tie bolt, and so on with the numbered sections—and that's all there is to it. Write for more Burnham Points.
